Less Really Is More

Video Game Trader is going to be sent on a quarterly basis from this point on.

Still with me? Stings, don't it? Like quickly yanking a band-aid off of a particularly sensitive wound, right? Now before you fire up your email clients and send scathing emails demanding particular organs to be removed from Tom's body, hear me out for a few hundred words. While I abhor the use of marketing buzz-phrases, "less is more" really does sum up what we here at V.G.T. are trying to do and hopefully in the next couple paragraphs, you'll think so too.

We've always wanted the magazine to grow. We started out as a humble online only mag that soon jumped to a 50/50 electronic/print format to finally the product you have in your hands. However we've reached a fork in the road-do we continue on our subscription only path or do we attempt to travel up a large hill to have V.G.T. adorn retail shelves and introduce an even larger audience to the glory of retro gaming? After much debate, we decided to take the more difficult path and go all out for brick-and-mortar domination. In order to do that we have to increase our page count to be able to be placed into stores BUT to do that we have to reduce our number of issues to maintain our budget. Even though V.G.T. is a labor of love and it is successful, it's still a business. There's just going to be some growing pains.

So what does this change mean to you, John or Jane Q. Reader who took a chance and subscribed to our humble publication besides a longer wait between issues?

You will NOT lose any issues. Current subscribers will continue to get the same number of issues they paid for. It just won't be bi-monthly.

The pacing will give our writers more time to write and polish their articles for your enjoyment (or just give them more time to procrastinate... cough like me cough).

The larger page count will allow even more articles to be in each and every issue.

After your current subscription is up, the rates will decrease to just $14.99 for quarterly issues.

So that's the scoop. It may be an awful pill to swallow at first but know that we aren't going anywhere. Heck we're just getting started. So kick back and enjoy the "Mascots" issue you have in your hands and we'll definitely see you next time.

July 8th, 1984: New Atari owner not playing games

ATARI INC., like any company with losses topping $500 million a year, had a lot of problems. But most industry analysts agree that one of its major handicaps was that the video-game and home-computer firm had just grown too fat during its good years.

Jack Tramiel, controversial founder and former president of Commodore International Ltd., who has purchased the troubled subsidiary of Warner Communications Inc. in a deal valued at about $300 million, is known as the type of chief executive for whom the term "lean and mean" was invented.

If anybody can make Atari profitable again, it's Tramiel, say friends and foes alike. But it is unlikely to be painless.

Within hours of his first walk-through of his new company Monday, Tramiel began wholesale layoffs, which could cut as many as 1,000 persons off the 5,000 member staff worldwide.

By the end of his first week, he had made it clear that in addition to personnel cutbacks, there would be cost-cutting measures instituted throughout the company, including closing a manufacturing plant in El Paso, Tex. He also had named his three sons to top management positions.

"He was greeted with nothing short of terror by the staff on his first day," said a former executive who keeps in touch with his one-time co-workers, whose morale has taken a roller-coaster ride along with the company's profits and losses in the last five years.

The major problem with the Atari-Warner marriage, which was consummated in 1976, when Warner Communications purchased Atari from founder Nolan Bushnell for $15 million, was "total mismanagement" by Warner, said Harold Vogel, an analyst with Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith Inc. in New York.

The former executive, who asked anonymity, concurs. "Warner ran Atari like a movie studio," he said.

"The engineers and conceptual people were the stars, and whatever they wanted they got. There was a cadre of executives who rose quickly through the ranks without benefit of the sophistication, education or experience that comes with time. They should have gotten that sophistication and savvy from the parent company, but they didn't, because Warner isn't a strong management company itself, and it couldn't teach something it didn't know to its subsidiary," said the executive, who spent 1983 on the Atari payroll.

Par of the problem, said analyst Robert Ladd of Duff & Phelps in Chicago, is that the market suddenly fell apart on the video-game industry at the same time that competition grew stronger in the home-computer industry. Atari's management, he added, had grown used to the good times and hadn't prepared for the lean ones.

From 1979 to 1982, Atari's sales doubled each year, reaching a peak of $2 billion. Last year, revenues were halved, dropping to $1.1 billion, and speculation is that they were well on their way to being halved again this year. A recent Fortune magazine article said former Chairman James Morgan had revised his 1984 budget to show sales of $500 million.

"Management got greedy," Ladd said. "They saw only the up side of the business. They didn't see it in the context of a fad market. Most companies in fad businesses have a more managed growth pattern. They don't build up the management structure to suit the peak years. Atari continued to beef up its management, research and development and marketing staffs—at one time an estimated 300—so that when sales abruptly stopped doubling and started plunging, they toppled over."

Another problem was the company's basic structure. The new management was trying to merge the video-game and computer divisions, which had been run separately, said a vice president of sales, interviewed in February after Morgan had been chairman for almost six months.

"Not only was it costly, but it was counterproductive; neither side knew what the other was doing or planning," he said then.

That dual operation was one of Atari's main problems, said another executive no longer with the company. "There were two distinct staffs, both bloated, and they spent money like water," he said.

Adding to the difficulties, observers say, was Atari's handling of the two products as if they had separate markets. "Atari viewed the two marketplaces as separate: a video-game-machine market and a home-computer market. That was a big mistake," the sales executive said. "They had the best computer on the market for three years, voted as the 'hobbyists' choice. They should have tried to combine the two and sell their low-end computer as a video game."

The sale of Atari to Tramiel, who left Commodore suddenly and without explanation in January, "came out of the blue," said one spokesman for Commodore who has known Tramiel for seven years.

It was no secret that Atari was on the block, but the primary suitor was perceived as N.V. Philips, the Dutch electronics firm, with whom negotiations had been continuing for months. Warner apparently just couldn't get enough money out of Philips, one analyst said.

Preliminary talks with Tramiel began in late May and intensified late last month, with the announcement of the sale coming Monday.

Beyond the early blood-letting, speculation on Tramiel's moves vary. Most industry observers agree, that given his dazzling success with Commodore, he will concentrate on the computer side of the business.

The Commodore spokesman, however, pointed out that Tramiel was impressed with the revenues generated in the past by the games division and is unlikely to let it drop. The game machines will continue as a standard, Ladd predicted, as long as Tramiel doesn't have to pump any money into it.

Tramiel is described variously as "brilliant, tough, aggressive and willing and able to change course in midstream," but he's also characterized as harsh and lacking in empathy with an emphasis on leanness that can be brutal.

Speculation runs heavy that the new Atari will veer towards an all-out attack on Apple Computer rather than the low-end, Commodore home-computer market.

Ladd said Tramiel is likely to come out with an Apple IIe-type computer as far as capabilities go, but with a price of $300 or $400 rather than $1,000.

"I don't see him coming out with a $1,000 computer to attach Apple straight on at its own price point," Ladd said. "The only way I can see Tramiel coming out with something at that price is if he introduces a Macintosh-type model in the $1,000 range."

Macintosh is Apple's newest star, a 32-bit office microcomputer that retails for $2,495.

WHAT COULD POSSIBLY GO WRONG?

"What could possibly go wrong?"

Those were the very first words I ever heard uttered by Bubsy Bobcat.

Being a huge Sega Genesis fan, I was there when a blue blur called Sonic The Hedgehog was unleashed on an unsuspecting video game world. Many had tried games with characters they could build series around. Sega had tried several itself, with Alex Kidd and the underrated Psycho Fox. But with Sonic suddenly getting fans talking, and debating if he was cooler than Mario, everybody wanted a mascot. Sunsoft tried Aero The Acrobat. Tengen got in on the act with Awesome Possum (a particularly hard sell with me, as there are possums in my neighborhood, and "cute" and "cuddly" are not adjectives that I associate with them). Electronic Arts came up with James Pond. And Accolade, not content to be left out in the cold, came up with Bubsy.

Accolade was in a strange position. Initially, they weren't authorized by Sega to make games for the Genesis. They came up with Ishido, a puzzle game, and Star Control, the first "heavy memory" (employed bankswitching to hold more data than the 8 megs the system was designed for) cartridge on the system. It was this renegade group that caused Sega to redesign the Genesis with a lockout code (it wasn't a perfect plan -- it also kept some legit licensed games, like EA's Zany Golf, from running on the new hardware). The result was Accolade and Sega suing each other. Sega sued Accolade for making games for the Genesis without permission. And Accolade sued because new games, due to the lockout, became "by or under license from Sega.", which misrepresented Accolade's unauthorized games. They eventually settled. Accolade was also an official Nintendo licensee.

Accolade decided to create a mascot. And you can't say they weren't ambitious about it. Accolade hyped Bubsy like there was no tomorrow. He may not have been the biggest name in video games, but you'd never know it from how he was handled. The star treatment included sending a birthday cake to Electronic Gaming Monthly on Bubsy's "1st birthday" (I don't know if other publishers got a cake, but I wouldn't doubt it. And I didn't even get a card). Bubsy was primed, and even had his own cartoon, voiced by acting legend Rob Paulsen. His voice is distinct and you know it when you hear it -- he was, among other things, the original voice of Raphael on Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles, Mighty Max, Diggeri Dingo on Tazmania, and Pinky and Wakko Warner on Animaniacs). I still have it in one of my many boxes of video tapes, along with a Battletoads cartoon. An intro comic ran in video game magazines. Bubsy was sort of like Paris Hilton -- if you act like a big deal, people will assume you're a big deal, and eventually you will become a big deal.

Of course, he was a video game mascot, so he

Coming soon to a kid's fast food meal near you.

under way. The Sony Playstation was a runaway hit with developers, publishers, and (most importantly) the buying public. Everybody was trying to figure out how to bring their games into the 3D realm and take advantage of the new horizons this technology offered. Accolade, naturally, put up its star and made Bubsy 3D, a direct sequel to the original game, taking place on the home planet of the aliens.

At this point, I would like to remind you of Bubsy's catchphrase, "What could possibly go wrong?"

Everything.

There's no point in mincing words. Bubsy 3D is a horrible, horrible game. While it is tempting to say people are just heaping abuse on a game that bombed like E.T. for the Atari 2600, there's a key difference. E.T. did everything it could in its doomed mission, including multiple actions (I believe it is the first instance of the "context-sensitive" button), a cube-like world to explore, and more. Bubsy 3D, however, didn't seem to do anything. The graphics are not just simplistic for the time, they are simplistic period. The models are horrible.

The landscape has no character or garish colors. Bubsy's constant chatter make you reach for the "mute" button faster than you could say "Bravoman". To borrow a phrase from Mystery Science Theater 3000 (and a frequent and rare criticism of the original Turok: Dinosaur Hunter), this thing had more fog than the movie "The Fog". Gameplay and techniques were uninteresting. The game felt more like a demo, or an early beta, than a finished product. It was difficult to find anything about the game that was actually likable, or well-done.

The fans rebelled. Bubsy 3D wasn't ignored like Super Pitfall on the NES was. He became a punch line. He was declared the most unlikable character in the history of video games by Games Radar. The game was an unmitigated failure and killed the franchise.

In many ways, Bubsy was the embodiment of hubris. With so many mediocre games scoring cash and merchandising deals just for having a mascot, you can't blame Accolade for trying their hand at it as well. There are even mascots that can survive having the game mechanics, that made them what they are, messed with, as Sonic The Hedgehog proves. But every once in a while, a mascot will fail despite the best effort and the train passes them by. With Bubsy, the train just ran him over.

by Peter G

Bubsy tours the sewer, trying to find yarn balls amongst all the Bubsy 3D Playstation game discs needed a video game. Bubsy took his cartoon inspirations to heart. Not only did he do the standard Mario "jump on enemies" shtick, but he could also stick out his arms, like a kid playing airplane, and actually glide around. The plot was that fabric stealing aliens had shown up on Earth. Instead of coins or rings, Bubsy ran around gathering up balls of yarn. He had many actions and even reacted to his surroundings. The colors were bright and the music was whimsical. The game was a hit.

By this time, the cartoon had come out. Bubsy II followed more in line with that set-up, including having Rob Paulsen providing the voice of the title character instead of the original actor, John A.S.

Skeel. Bubsy's sidekick was a timid armadillo, and he had a niece and nephew as well. The plot was actually pretty interesting, taking place in a theme park gone bonkers. The historical displays were stealing actual history, and Bubsy had to restore it. Bubsy II, likewise did well.

At this time, Atari was working on its Jaguar game system, and Accolade did a special Bubsy game for it. Fractured Furry Tales had Bubsy running through children's stories in an attempt to set things right.

The next generation of games was well

Alien planet, or just another fine day in LA? You decide.

Spike: Alive and Well in the Land of Vectors

It's pretty obvious that the Vectrex is different. It's the only games console that's ever used vector scan graphics. While competing consoles used raster drawn pixels for the imaging, vector scanned graphics are sharp lines drawn dot to dot, making Vectrex games very distinctive. Unfortunately the Vectrex has a limitation on how many lines (vectors) can be displayed at the same time before the whole screen starts flickering. Therefore Vectrex programmers strive to portray games with images comprising of simple line drawings in order to reduce flicker. The lack of detail for any given Vectrex drawn image maybe one of the main reasons why it never spawned a recognizable and commercially successful games icon such as Namco's Pac-Man, Nintendo's Mario and Sega's Sonic the Hedgehog. All three have been through the merchandising bandwagon with numerous spin-off games, books and even cuddly toys. Despite the limitations, there is one memorable character that was able to stand out from the vector crowd and who has become dear to Vectrex fans' hearts: a little smiley-faced 5-point-star-shaped creature known as Spike.

Spike debuted in a game of the same name in 1983. Tom Sloper, the game designer for "Spike", had said that he was a big fan of the arcade game "Donkey Kong" (where Mario first appeared) and as such, there is a similar game philosophy between the two games. Both are platform games where the lead characters have to negotiate up a series of platforms whilst avoiding obstacles and jumping over gaps. The goal for both games is to reach the top platform to rescue a kidnapped girl. But there the similarities between the games end. Jay Smith, "father" of the Vectrex, had asked Tom to come up with a game that looked 3D (a request that came before the Vectrex 3D imager, which launched in 1984). Tom achieved Jay's requirements by coming up with a game design where effectively it was a 2D platform type game but it was presented with an isometric 3D type perspective.

The game begins with Molly (Spike's love) being dragged away through a doorway by the villain Evil Spud. In the game itself there are three horizontally moving platform levels connected by a moveable ladder. Spike has to maneuver up the platform in order to fetch a key that will allow him to unlock the cage which contains Molly. This task is made more and more difficult as there are two types of enemies that are sent down the platform levels by Spud to knock Spike off the platform. One type is called a bouncer and looks like a box with a spring attached to it which quite literally bounces around. The other type of enemy is a bird that flies about the screen. Both enemy types are intent on knocking Spike off the platform but they can be dodged or fought off with a sharp kick from Spike.

In addition to the isometric 3D perspective, this game had one other interesting novelty: it was the first console game to use sampled sound without the addition of any special hardware. Jay Smith had a pocket-sized electronic speech sampling device which had a chorus of voices recorded on it saying "Back to work!" He would carry it around and play the message back to his staff when he thought they weren't working. This pocket device was the inspiration for putting a digitized voice in "Spike". The sampling and playback rate of the pre-recorded sound is low by today's standards, but the digitized yells by Molly such as "Eek! Help, Spike!" and Spike's immortal cry of "Damn it!" (heard after he falls off a platform) are nevertheless quite distinctive and memorable.

Many Vectrex fans wonder what sort of being Spike actually is. Some believe him to be an 80's punk as it appears he has a spiky haircut, which would have been a popular choice for the punk movement at that time. In reality, Spike became the form he is simply because Tom Sloper wanted to avoid image flicker and use as few vector lines as possible to represent his lead character. This meant that a circle couldn't be drawn to represent the head because it would have required multiple vectors. In the end a star shape with legs attached was settled upon. The name "Spike" came from a suggestion by Colin Vowles, one of Tom's work colleagues at the time. Colin, whose father-in-law was called "Spike", thought that the "Spike" name was very apt for the spiky shaped video game character.

"Spike" was one of the last five games released by Milton Bradley (MB) / GCE for the Vectrex. The fact that the video game market crashed, sending the Vectrex to an early commercial grave in 1984, quashed all possibilities of Spike the character ever appearing in a commercial video game again. However, this is not the end of the story. Vectrex home brewers have taken over where MB / GCE left off and have adopted Spike. As a result he has continued to appear in new games throughout the last 26 years and has become the unofficial Vectrex game mascot.

Some 12 years after the last commercial Vectrex games release, John Dondzila was the first home brewer to bring out a number of new games for the Vectrex. One of these games, released in 1996, was called "Spike's Water Balloons" and featured the return not only of Spike but also Molly and the Evil Spud. The game has similar play to the 80's arcade game called "Kick" or "Kick Man", but instead of a clown on a unicycle catching falling balloons it is Spike who must be maneuvered to pop falling water balloons dropped by Spud. Originally controlled with the joystick controller operating in digital mode, a later release of "Spike's Water Balloons" worked with the joystick controller operating in analogue mode as well which allowed for much faster play. John went on to include Spike as the star in another game called "Spike Hoppin'", which was based on the classic 80's game "Q*Bert". Spike has to be hopped around a pyramid of stepping stones while avoiding the Evil Spud and other enemies. If Spike wasn't the star in one of John's later games he would still crop up in them. In "Vectopia" which is a collection of games, Spike would appear on a special menu option.

From 2001 onwards, other home brewers were releasing games with Spike. Mark De Smit released a double game cartridge titled "VecCaves/Spike's Spree". The "Spike's Spree" game has a lot of similarities with the Atari 2600 game "Fast Food" but has near identical graphics to those in the original Spike game. Like "Fast Food", objects shoot from the left side of the screen and Spike has to be moved around to catch them while avoiding objects such as birds and Spuds. In contrast to the 2600 title, other objects like Molly and keys have to be caught in the correct order. The game is controlled with the joystick in analogue mode and requires 100% of one's attention span in order to play. Interestingly, author Mark has stated that there is a small Easter egg in "Spike's Spree", but much to his surprise no one has yet found it.

Home brewer Manu Pärssinen gave Spike a couple of arms and placed him as an opponent to fight in the boxing ring in his 2002 game "Vec Sport Boxing". The following year Alex Herbert included a bonus mini game starring Spike in the limited edition cartridge version of the famous Vectrex "Defender" clone, "Protector", which was unlocked by beating the default high score and became a choice on the Options screen. In the mini game, called "Spike Goes Down", Spike must move from side to side on elevated platforms to collect items and then fall down through available gaps in the platform to advance through the game.

Alex Nicholson of Vectorzoa Logo fame released "Spikes Circus" in 2006. According to the text introduced at the beginning of the game and accompanied by circus music, Spike is a circus owner and Spud is a lion tamer. Spike has to make Spud redundant, as Lions (and caged animals in general) aren't popular. Like the original plot 20 years earlier, Spud has kidnapped Molly, This time though Spud wants to humiliate Spike and this is where the game starts. If you have a VecVox (the homebrew speech synthesizer) plugged in, Spud will actually sing this plotline as part of the intro.

You control Spike, who has to ride a unicycle across a tightrope. With over 50 varied games levels, Spike has to scale hills and ramps, juggle Indian clubs, balance objects on his head and bounce balls off his head to hit targets, all whilst on his unicycle. An interesting fact is that Spikes Circus was originally called "F=ma" which is quite an apt title considering the physics behind the unicycle motion and game play.

On his website Alex did say he would be working on a "Spike Circus" version two: "Spud Bounces Back", but it is unknown if this game will ever be continued. In this game Spud is the star hero and has him bouncing around on a pogo stick.

There have also been a number of other unfinished games announced or demoed where Spike is the star character. Although these games have been announced on the respective author's sites and even together with screen shots, it is unknown when and if they will be actually released. For most if not all home brewers, the land of Vectors is second to real life and as such even the best laid plans for game development can be upset by real world time pressures.

In 2006, John Dondzila produced his last released Vectrex game to date called "Space Frenzy". Of interest is that on the same cartridge is an unfinished game demo called "Super Spike World". This is a horizontal scrolling platform type game and Spike, who is viewed from his side profile

(for the first time), has to hop on various suspended platforms and bop Spud clones.

Although never updated and missing sound and scoring, it is still an interesting demo. After controlling Spike some distance in the game the Starship Enterprise from Star Trek is encountered!

"Spike Super Sports" by Martijn Wenting looks to be the most advanced in terms of completion for an unfinished game. The game features Spike, Molly and Spud who are pitted against each other in sports events such as 100m dash, long jump, archery, 110m hurdles and key toss. The game is also said to support the VecVox. However, as yet the game has not been released.

Spike's most recent appearance to date is in Andy Coleman's one button controlled game called "City Bomber", which was released in late 2007. If you manage to bomb down all the sky scrapers so that you can land your falling plane, out jumps Spike from the cockpit. Unfortunately, this is the only appearance made by Spike in this game. The limited edition "City Bomber" cartridge is also a double game cartridge that includes the title "Spike Goes Skiing". Also available as a free downloadable demo, "Spike Goes Skiing" has Spike adorned with skis travelling down a scrolling ski run with the aim of skiing between slalom flags and avoiding trees.

As you can see, Spike is alive and well. Who knows, had history been different, perhaps today in addition to the now famous video game icons such as Nintendo's little fat Italian plumber and Sega's hyper active hedgehog, the world would have also been familiar with MB / GCE spiky little video game character. So what of the activities of Spike's original creator? Well, Tom Sloper went on to design many other games, not just for the Vectrex but later (and to this day) other video games consoles as well. He also offers consultancy service on games design at www.sloperama.com. Visiting this site, Tom's connection to Spike can still be seen as Spike is immediately visible as the website's icon on the address bar!

Everyone knows that when the NES first dropped into stores in 1985, Super Mario Bros. was the game that convinced the world that a Nintendo was worth buying. Ever since, Mario has been the unquestioned mascot of Nintendo. But prior to 1985, as any arcade junkie could tell you, Donkey Kong was the king of Nintendo. One would have thought that Donkey Kong and Mario both would have been given star treatment with the release of the NES, but that was not the case. The only game that starred DK at launch was, the educational game, Donkey Kong Jr. Math. Mario, on the other hand, was featured in six games! He is the referee in Tennis, the golfer in Golf and he saves Pauline, in the bonus game, in Pinball. Of course, he is also the star of Super Mario Bros. and the star in the little played, and long forgotten, Wrecking Crew.

Wrecking Crew is one of the few non-educational Mario games released on the Nintendo that no one ever talks about. The main reason for that is because it is completely different from Super Mario Bros. and therefore probably disappointed many gamers back in 1985. Looking back at this title, almost 25 years later, it is much easier to appreciate. The first change you will notice right off the bat is that Mario is not a plumber in this game; instead he appears to be some kind of construction worker. The next major difference, in Wrecking Crew, is that the game is not a side-scroller. It's a one-screen puzzle game. Here's how it works. On each stage you control Mario who is equipped with a hammer. Your goal is to destroy all of the walls and ladders on the stage in order for the "building" to be properly destroyed. Of course it's not that easy when you have strange alien creatures walking around that want to kill you, and you inexplicably cannot use your hammer to hurt them. This means that you have to completely avoid contact with any baddies while trying to demolish all of the walls and ladders on each stage. Overall there are 100 stages to play, and like many of the early puzzle games on the NES, you can skip around to any stage and even design your own impossible stage to completely frustrate your brother.

Wrecking Crew is actually one of the better games that came out among the initial launch titles, but was completely missed by everyone noticing Super Mario Bros., Duck Hunt and Kung Fu. Unfortunately no sequels were ever made for this game on the NES, and it quickly disappeared into that giant stack of NES games that never existed in most people's minds.

Positives:

Wrecking Crew provides a great challenge with 100 stages, many of which are impossible to solve on your first try. There are also some hidden secrets to discover in this game, which gives it great replay value. I like how you can choose what stage to start on, there's nothing more frustrating then having to replay 20 or 30 stages that you've already mastered just to get to where you left off at. Of course having Mario as your main character is always a benefit. This game also benefits from having a Wario-prototype character, named Spike, who looks suspiciously like Mario but is his mortal enemy. The level designer is also real fun because you can take turns with a friend making stages and then try solving them. Unfortunately you can't save the stages you design but that is standard procedure on the NES.

If you also destroy the walls on a stage in the correct secret order you will spell out the letters of Mario. If you can spell out his whole name you win a prize, which in some levels is a special hammer that allows you to smash the bad guys and smash walls at a quicker pace. I've never actually gotten one myself but I've seen people do it using save states on-line.

Glaring Negatives:

For some reason, Mario looks quite different from the Mario featured in Super Mario Bros. If you took a glance at him you would assume that this game was made a couple years prior because of how primitive he looks. The graphics overall are weak. It's also disappointing that none of the bad guys from the Mushroom Kingdom nor any of Mario's attacks from SMB are featured in this game. Wrecking Crew's gameplay has a lot more in common with Mario Bros., although it doesn't share any of the enemies of that game either.

Graphics and Sound: Primitive

This game is an early NES title and it looks like it. Mario has one giant schnoz, wears a red helmet and looks like he was lifted straight from an Atari game. The backgrounds are always the same black building, and there are only a handful of enemies that repeat on every stage. Each stage is only one screen wide but two screens tall. The music gets really repetitive as it's the same on all 100 stages.

Gameplay and Controls: Basic

Wrecking Crew is one of those standard old school puzzlers where you can't touch the enemy at all or you will die. Because of this, the real puzzle to the game is not how to destroy all of the walls, it's how to avoid the bad guys. The controls are fine. Mario slowly walks around the screen, you can press either button to smash walls with your hammer, and you can fall from any distance without dying. Of course, like many early puzzlers, Mario has no ability to jump!

Features: Stage Designer

As mentioned earlier in the review, this game has a level designer. I always loved those when I was a young gamer.

Fun?: Yes, but tedious

You will probably enjoy this game at first, but give up on it before you've beaten all 100 stages. The good news is you will probably pick it up again some time later and have plenty more stages to play. If you love puzzle games, though, you will enjoy working your way through all 100 stages.

Challenge: Hard

There are two different challenges to this game. First, can you beat all 100 stages? Then, can you beat them all in one sitting? With patience and determination anyone can accomplish the first challenge. If you can master the second challenge then you are a better gamer than I.

Replay: Yes

This game definitely has replay value because it's difficult. However, since you can skip to whatever stage you want, there isn't much frustration since you can always skip past a stage that is frustrating you.

2 Player: Yes

Wrecking Crew offers the standard alternating two-player mode that the NES was famous for. You star as Luigi, but, he isn't wearing a green outfit. The best two-player mode, though, is to create level and then challenge your buddy to beat it.

Bottom Line: Typical LJN fare

While certainly not on par with Mario's Super entries, Wrecking Crew is an enjoyable puzzle game that offers up just enough features to make it genuinely fun. There is some serious challenge to the game since there are 100 stages but since you can skip around you won't get too frustrated. Also, you've got to love any game with a stage design feature.

Coin-Op TV DVD Volume 2 is overall a nice distraction and pleasant romp through the coin-op niche. If you enjoyed the first volume, expect more of the same.

This second video embraces interviews with gaming pioneers and gaming personalities. Included within volume two are Robotron and Defender creator Eugene Jarvis; Gears of War's Cliffy B; personality Tommy Tallarico; SNK's KOF Falcoon, Dragon's Lair Project founder and coin-op collector Jeff Kinder; several world record holders; Anime cosplayers; "I am 8-bit" artists and more. Some of those interviewed are real stars, while others leave you scratching your head as to why you are watching the video. For every Cary Grant, there is a B-movie actress waiting in the wings.

While volume #2 is new, the interviews included on the disc are several years old. I know this because I worked on several of Leonard Herman's books myself, and while being interviewed he is holding a draft of the book cover that I designed. The disc also features two consecutive annual "I am 8-bit events" dating the content almost as if done on purpose. If you are looking for something modern, you're in the wrong place. But if you're in a retro mood, then this will be just fine as there is no real rush with classic gaming... it just becomes more classic!

The impressive venues span the globe. In ninety minutes you will travel from New York City to California to Japan. Interesting locales go beyond the typical convention and show floor, such as the FunSpot Arcade, Leonard Herman's backyard, an art gallery and the Videotopia warehouse. Coin-Op TV deserves credit for locating able talent across the planet.

The interviewers are very casual. While it may not be the case, some seem to be more concerned about training to become television anchors rather than actual groupies of the industry. Host Taryn Southern seems to be the exception and is exceptional. She is truly the brilliant gem among the stones in the garden. Alan Akin is a bit rough to watch, but considering that he is also translating between English and Japanese in real-time, he scores kudos for working in such an environment. Some of the other reporters' inquiries are rather basic, and their questions seem to display their lack of knowledge about the subjects they are interviewing. Some questions, such as "Are there any other games that you particularly like?" seem just plain ridiculous to ask one of the great game designers of all time. Of course Eugene Jarvis likes games! How could he be so successful in the field if he didn't like games! Despite such rudimentary questions, many of the interviewees had some great information to offer, such as Jarvis speaking about "conflicting goals" in game design.

One portion of the DVD features several world record holders discussing their favorite arcade games. In what would surprise no one, they all seemed to mostly pick the same game titles for which they hold the world records. It seems obvious that for any of them to be able to score so well and push the games to their max the way they do, they might actually enjoy playing those particular titles.

In addition to the interviews, the disc also includes a short tribute to the game Galaxian called the Galaxian Defense League. This unexpected surprise, while intentionally corny, offers up many clever anecdotes that are very amusing and provoke many new thoughts about a common friend.

A great deal of anime shares similarities and even characters with their videogame counterparts, so I can understand the link with videogames. While I grew up on Robotech and can appreciate Japanese animation, accepting cosplay can sometimes be hard to swallow. The individuals that Coin-Op TV chose to interview do not represent cosplayers very well. After watching the interview with cosplayer Man-Faye, any respect that you may have been generous enough to give to other cosplayers will forever be tarnished. I also learned that a one hundred pound "stick-man" - who takes five months to grow a "goatee" in preparation for the convention - should not attempt to emulate the God of War. In a more positive light, who knew that green and pink would make for such sexy hairstyles?

Many of those interviewed offer some real insight into their own personal lives. Who knew that Arkanoïd World Champion Zack Hamble is as obsessed with the sport of Baseball as he is about busting digital bricks? Owning 2496 baseballs, all personally retrieved in stadiums across the country, is quite a feat. Hearing that he taught himself several languages, including sign language, in order to communicate with foreign players so that he could request a game ball is truly extreme.

And "extreme" is what the Coin-Op TV project is all about. The whole production screams of fanatics going past the norm to celebrate the hobby that they love! I get that, and I very much salute Coin-Op TV for what they have delivered. While flawed, it is exceptional and succeeds on several levels.

The entire design is a mixed bag as the level of quality peaks and dips. The production values of the disc are disjointed. The editing overall is solid. The filming, including the lighting, is respectable considering the venues where the interviews are conducted. However, actual videogame footage shown is very blurry. This is not forgivable as the game play footage was added after-the-fact in post-production.

Please recognize that I am covering this DVD review as a video professional, involved in the industry for well over a decade. Normally I would acknowledge that this is a compilation of footage originally created for internet viewing, and leave it at that. However, Coin-Op TV tries to present itself as serious journalism. Provided that you recognize their limitations, even when they do not, you can look past the shortcomings.

You may take that as a slap in the face to the producers, but that is simply not the case.

The DVD is obviously a labor of love by many of those involved. I'm a BIG supporter of hobbyist projects and products, and I've launched dozens myself. We all know that if we waited for network news crews or, God-forbid Hollywood to cover such events, that the sands of the hourglass would surely expire and we would all be disappointed. Coin-Op TV fills this void. Small players with big dreams make such projects a reality!

While it is definitely low budget, it doesn't mean that fans of the grand ol' arcades of the 80's, and even modern game players, cannot enjoy it. There is a lot to celebrate when watching Coin-Op TV. If you love the big arcades of the past and care for gaming in general, the lore alone will be enough to feed you quite well at the table.

Alf

For the Sega Master System

Alf is everyone's favorite cat from Melmac, well he's not really a cat, but he does love to eat them. Alf was a great character from the 80's. He had it all, a family to support him, his own trading cards, toys, and even a video game. He was sarcastic and troublesome, but really funny. Biggest problem with Alf was he was ugly, just like his video game.

The goal of the game In Alf, for the Sega Master System, was to help him find parts to repair his space ship. The game was developed by Nexa, and is considered, by many, to be one of the worst Master System games. A few minutes playing the game and you can see why. But there are some good points that need mentioning. First and most importantly, it is the only console game to feature ALF. So if you love the wisecracking nature of Alf, you'll probably like this game. Secondly, the music could have been a lot worse than it actually is. Some of the songs, you may even find yourself humming now and then.

Now the bad, Alf has horrible gameplay. There's not much to do other than jump. Detection is also off. For example, on the street scene, you can be hit by the car, even if not in its line of sight. Graphics for the Master System are typically better than the NES but you would never know it looking at this game. Alf looks like a big brown pile of mush. No colors to bring out his true look.

Overall, despite being a generally poor game, many video game collectors, and Alf fans, are looking for it. So, if you spot this game in the wild, pick it up. The price on this title may just keep going up. The current value for the game, complete with original box and manual is $19.

VectrexMad! AutoFire Dongle

For the Vectrex

VectrexMad!, our resident VGT reporter for all things Vectrex has stepped in to the world of homebrew hardware production. He has produced a small batch of AutoFire dongles for the Vectrex which gives the player super human shooting powers. The inline dongle sits between the Vectrex console and the controller plug, and with the fire button pressed down achieves a constant firing. In August we caught up with VectrexMad! to find out more. Below is an edited version of our interview. Read the complete interview at VideoGameTrader.com

VGT: Hello VectrexMad! Why did you suddenly produce these AutoFire dongles for the Vectrex, isn't writing Vectrex articles for VGT enough to fill your spare time?

VectrexMad!: It's all because some months prior to the release of the AutoFire dongle, my finger had started to hurt. Whether this has been caused by playing too many video games or using the mouse button too much at work I don't know, but my finger was really becoming swollen and I couldn't enjoy playing Vectrex games anymore. I therefore produced a small prototype circuit that emulated multiple pressing of the fire button with a single button press on the controller. It works really well. Then I thought, hey it's fairly likely that in the demographic of Vectrex owners there are likely to be other people like me who could also benefit from the AutoFire dongle. And it is true, immediately after the launch of the AutoFire dongle, I received a number of emails from people who said they didn't play the Vectrex anymore because of repetitive strain injury.

VGT: Ignoring the commendable finger saving benefits, one might argue that the Auto Fire dongle is just a cheating aid to proceed further in games.

VectrexMad: Well for me, a side effect of the AutoFire dongle is that it brings back new interest in old games. Now, with the AutoFire dongle, getting to later game levels is possible much earlier on. My girlfriend has jokingly said to me that I've have made a cheating device and that I should keep quiet about it. Perhaps, owning or not an AutoFire dongle does signify the end of fairness in the competitions which homebrewers occasionally hold when they release their new games. My thoughts are that Vectrex fans are a decent bunch so I don't think there will be any foul play involved to win a competition. Anyway, a video is always required for proof of reaching a particular game level and it would be pretty obvious if an auto fire circuit was in use.

VGT: How are you finding homebrewing, will you be releasing anything else in the future?

VectrexMad!: Yes, I am enjoying the experience. It's nice to be able to say you made a product which is being purchased by more than one person. I'm also getting a lot of positive emails from other Vectrex users. My next Vectrex project is a game, it's currently 60% finished, but time permitting I want to release before January next year. It will be a game of the type never seen before on the Vectrex, so I don't want to say too much more just yet.

VGT: Thanks for your time and we wish your finger good health.

Ultimate Frogger Champion

For the Nintendo Entertainment System

Designed and programmed by Kevin Hanley, Brian Parker, and James Todd of KHAN Games. Music by Kevein Hanley.

Distributed by RetroZone (www.RetroUSB.com).

Classics. There's a reason they are called "classics." Because they couldn't possibly be screwed up. Take a game like Tetris. Or Pac-Man. These are very simple games, easy to get into, easy to get somewhere with, regardless of your skill level, you were able to spend time and have fun with these games. Great stuff, right?

The thing about classics, though, is that, as the video game field advances, developers become more interested in creating new thrills, than understanding why the games of the past did so well. Homebrewers, and garage programmers, fill the void, creating clones or remakes of the classics to share with others who don't know what they're missing.

The question on many developers minds is, "what game do I want to program?" For some people, it's finding a game that has never made it to a particular platform and deliver those goods. (I had been toying with creating a Zaxxon clone starring Tux The Linux Penguin and setting it underwater until I saw Zaxxon RR and abandoned the idea. I wanted a Zaxxon experience, someone else did it, I was happy.)

In many ways, it truly is surprising that Frogger has never appeared on the Nintendo Entertainment System. The system had games that captured the arcade feel (and sounds) of Gyruss, Donkey Kong, and scores of other 8 bit games. Tengen even tried to bring After Burner to it (which I knew wouldn't work. It couldn't be pulled off on the more powerful Sega Master System, so the NES had no chance). Frogger even made it to the Sega Genesis, becoming one of the last official retail releases on the system. Frogger was ported to just about every 6 bit system by Parker Brothers. PSION even made a version of Frogger for the Timex/Sinclair 1000 (I had it), making up for the crude graphics by splitting the action between two separate screens. It was part of the second round of releases just before the unit was given up on, but a very arcade-faithful remake of Frogger even appeared on the black and white Tiger game.com. But there's this yawning gap in the 8 bit systems, with the little green hopper being MIA.

Until now. Kevin Hanley decided to pick up the ball and create Ultimate Frogger Champion. Since the NES is C-based for programming, it eliminates a lot of the headaches associated with cycle counting or modes that the 6 bitters had. So he got busy with his buddies, and the result is a pretty professional looking package, complete with shrink-wrap, cart sleeve, a green translucent cart shell, a little rubber frog, and best of all, A STYRO-FOAM BLOCK!!! I bet that would fetch a pretty penny on eBay!

The instruction manual, by the way, is pretty entertaining. It goes for some light jokes, especially in the product liability warnings. You won't guffaw, but you will get a smirk or two out of it.

Tim to pull out my NES, remove the copy of Bump 'N Jump that has, more or less, taken up permanent residence in there, and pop in the cart. Simply put, it is Frogger. It's a single boarder with the screen split into two regions. The first is a highway, with five lanes of traffic that you have to hop your frog through. The frog jumps, traveling a fixed distance each time, so you won't be nudging in different directions here. Get to the center divider, periodically patrolled by a snake, and you have to make it across the river. Here, instead of dodging the obstacles, you have to make contact with them to reach one of the five home bays at the top of the screen. All the while, a countdown timer steadily depletes.

The game isn't bad. Really. But then again, it's tough to screw up Frogger. As long as the collision detection works fine, you're good to go.

And therein lies the rub, the collision detection is kind of picky. Maneuvering through traffic, you don't have a lot of room for error, as even a pixel is enough to squish your frog. Not a problem in the early levels, but later in the games, where you have to move with traffic until an opening appears, a jump too soon spells instant doom. As traffic gets heavier and the river objects get more sparse, it really becomes a challenge to stay on top of it all without putting that toe over the line.

It should also be noted that the game has no sound effects, just background music. The music starts off with the familiar Frogger theme, but then goes for an action remix that sounds more appropriate for a military action game like Rush 'N Attack than Frogger.

The game also features a two-player option. But instead of alternating turns like all the other versions, here you are both on screen at the same time in a simple race, building a cooperative score while trying to get more frogs in the top bays than the other. Interesting, but not interesting enough.

Ultimate Frogger Champion is what it is – a faithful remake of Frogger. Although, and I know this is a bit picky, I wasn't crazy for the background music and the lack of sound effects. Despite how accurate it is, when there are so many other versions with the complete package, UFC is actually at a disadvantage. I want to give Hanley bigger ups than I am, but I just can't see ditching the pseudo 3D remake on my computer or my Genesis version or my great Atari 2600 port or....in favor of it.

Phantasm

For the Atari 2600

Original Gameplay and Programming - David Weavil
Additional Programming - Fred Quimby (BATARI BASIC)
Phantasm Title Music - Fred Quimby (BATARI BASIC)
Produced by - Scott Dayton (NEO GAMES)
Label Artwork Provided by - Ray Catuto (www.myspace.com/raycatuto)

Released by NEO Games

Cartridge and Manual Services - AtariAge

Phantasm was originally made for a special autograph cartridge to be signed by the Tall Man (Angus Scrimm) at the 2008 Spooky Empire Scremfest in Orlando Florida. Scott Dayton has been getting Atari 2600 cartridges made and signed by several celebrities including Elvira, Freddy Kruger and almost the entire cast of Dawn of the Dead. Last year Scott opened it up to any programmers who wanted to get involved. David came up with the game for Phantasm. The original game only had one location (Morningside Cemetery). The new version has several new locations as well as a final battle against the Tall Man.

I have to honestly admit something right up front....even though I saw the original 1979 Phantasm back in the 80s (and some of its sequels), I didn't think much of it other than filling a couple of hours of entertainment and not looking back. Needless to say that when I heard of an upcoming Atari 2600 game based on the movie, I wasn't really excited at all. Let's face it....a lot of movie tie in video games are average at best, and usually fail in the game play department. I am here to say that I am ready to eat my words about all movie tie ins, as Phantasm for the 2600 will shatter the stereotype of movie tie-in video games.

First there is the packaging. The game graciously comes in a very ingenious use of an old school VHS rental case and very nicely done outside artwork. This game begs to be proudly displayed on a collector's shelf. Inside I was greeted with several pieces of true hardcore greatness:

- A picture of Angus Scrimm who plays "Tall

Autographed Original Version Carts

Man" in the Phantasm Series.

- Authentic looking full color 8 page manual
- Custom dual sided artwork
- Limited Edition numbered card
- High quality artwork on cart itself....complete with Velcro strip for usage in case for secure placement

For a collector as much as a gamer, these are the types of items that make any person smile. The quality is top notch and really stands out as more than just a homebrew 2600 title. This game has better production value than most official 2600 games had back in the day.

Although the packaging of this great game is excellent, it means nothing if the game sucked. I am happy to report that this game is as excellent in game play as it is in packaging. As I booted up the game, I was pleasantly surprised by the intro screen, which faithfully does a good job of recreating the Phantasm theme music.

Like many games, I quickly jumped into the action

and started to play the game, only to be reminded that I should first read the manual to figure out how to play the game properly. The premise is fairly straight forward. Simple up, down, left and right commands are given to move your person through a maze. The screen shows a randomly generated first person maze, in which the goal is to find the dimensional gate and destroy it. This requires finding and locating a tuning fork in the maze. As the levels progress, you will have to do additional tasks before the dimensional gate is visible. Along the way there are enemies Tall Man and Dwarves. A shotgun can be found to attack enemies, which can be avoided. When you are hit by an enemy, you lose a hit point. The game ends when your hit points reach zero. Ice Cream cones can be found to give you one point of HP.

The game's graphics and sound are above average, but what really stands out in this simple game is the gameplay. At first, I really did not get the game, but like so many other "thinking man" titles, two hours later I was hooked. This game even inspired me to grab some good old graph paper to map out a game level, even though I knew it was different every time I played.

After playing the game several times, I find myself wanting to play it more. This to me is an indicator of an excellent title that underneath its crazy movie tie-in license is an excellent game that can be way more than an awesome collector's mantle piece. If this is an example of what can be done for an Atari 2600 homebrew, then the future for other projects is a very bright one.

Mad Bodies

For the Atari Jaguar

By and Distributed by FORCE Design
(www.MadBodies.com).

It's a new game for the Atari Jaguar!

It's done after six years of work!

Wait a minute. This took six years?

The Jag is one of those game systems I would love to see more development for. I actually liked the controllers and the extra functionality of the keypad.

However, most people looking to really show off their homebrewing skills will go with the Sega Dreamcast. After all, it's cheaper to burn a CD than manufacture a cart. So I understand the economics. Especially after all of the bad luck developers have been having with the Jaguar, like Hasbro saying homebrewers can freely program for the Jaguar but they didn't know what the encryption key was or where to find it. The Jaguar just can't catch a break. I mean, come on. There were more homebrew games devved for the Atari 5200 or 7800 than the Jag, and those systems are no picnic to work on.

So, the "Oh! You're still here?" of classic gaming gets itself a new title. The people making MadBodies are clearly having a ball. Too bad they don't let the rest of us in on it. You think I'm kidding? The story set-up appears to be a series of inside jokes. And I quote:

"A new form of evil has emerged. In order to rule the universe, The Graphics Man has fused the world's reality within his ebionic mind, and it's up to you to stop him! With your help, ETHunter, Clay, Skip, Thunderbird and Wes are out to stop the devastating madness known as The Graphics Man! How are they to defeat such an insurmountable evil? By entering the Dark Knight Games tournament, co-hosted by Dave Vapourware, that's how!"

"Not long ago, ETHunter, Clay, Skip and Thunderbird trash-talked the innocent new Jaguar developer, The Graphics Man. They insulted him on everything from the grammar he used in messages on Jaguar Interactive II, to personal attacks about his intellect. And out of all people, Wes decided to join in on the fun. After that, The Graphics Man vowed to make them all stars, just to destroy them in the end. And by using his mind-altering abilities, he changes the world's reality to rule all!"

I think I speak for everyone when I say, "...what?" It makes the storylines for Ninja Golf and Kung Food seem positively coherent.

"The Graphics Man" is Terance Williams. His FORCE Design shingle got put up in 1998. A freelance artist, his early stuff was graphic design for everything from business cards to video games. So he decided to make his own game (MadBodies was originally going to be a Jaguar CD game, but that idea got abandoned around 2004). He and his team are also working on another Jaguar came called "MightyFrog." The graphics, trailer, and backstory on the web page paint the picture of a Q*bert clone of some kind with projectile weapons thrown in for fits and giggles. The milestones indicate the game is nearly done, but the page hasn't been updated in over a year. I'm figuring Williams to be project lead for MadBodies, since he's involved in just about all aspects of the production except for testing. So, the set-up is that the fate of reality is at stake, so the mighty heroes enter a game tournament to defeat "The Graphics Man." Okay, a bit flimsy, but I'll go with it.

Or at least, I do until I actually fire up the game. The game itself seems to have almost zilch to do with the set-up. For all the hype about a game tournament and such, the game proper is a little like Breakout or Jinks (or Arkanoid with the laser cannon power-up enabled). You have a flat paddle at the bottom of the screen, slides left and right. There is a target square above you that you can adjust the height on – horizontally, it tracks with your paddle. Pressing the B button make you fire into the square and the square only – it doesn't appear to affect anything en route, so thinking you can use this to "sweep" enemies off the screen is not gonna happen. You can take multiple hits, your paddle has a "jump" feature (ah, yes, Video Olympics. Good times, good times...) and can "dash" to give your paddle some speed since you don't have a dial control.

So you get an asteroid or something bouncing around the screen. You must keep it on the screen, bouncing it off your paddle – missing it counts as a miss and damages your ship. Or, you can simply blast whatever it is. In my gameplay, the asteroid didn't replicate and I was free from having to worry about it until the next round, unless I just didn't notice what the end result of that was. You also get a fireball dropping down the screen that you have to avoid and clumps of enemies shooting at you that you can shoot down with your target cursor. At least, that's what I think you're supposed to do.

I know that all sounds vague, but that's kind of the nature of the whole project. Most of the time, I felt like the guy in Metal Gear Awesome, going, "Yeah, I don't know what to do." I didn't know if I was supposed to blast things or not, since you are never given any indication that you are doing something right. The instruction manual mentions there's lots of hidden surprises in the game. I will gladly do without surprises in exchange for some clarity about my objectives. I can't really tell you how I advanced through levels, whether by time limit or by destroying X number of enemies or what. You can get an equally satisfying experience pressing the buttons at random and declaring you've beaten the game.

The music isn't bad. The title screen music is actually pretty good, and I wouldn't mind having it on my music player. I honestly don't remember much about the in-game music, as my brain was trying to make sense of what I was supposed to be doing (and pretty much failing miserably at it).

I want to reserve some complaints about the control scheme. I think the game would have worked better if you could set it up like 'Nam 75, where your shooter and the target are independent of each other. Your soldier could move left and right along the bottom to dodge attacks, and then he stood still while you move the target around to handle the enemies. As it is, sliding your paddle to where you can get off a shot puts you directly in harm's way and makes the game more frustrating.

I just don't get MadBodies. I don't get what I'm supposed to do, I don't get how I'm supposed to do it, and I like to think I'm a pretty clever guy. Between the ill-advised control scheme and vagueness of the instructions, what is meant to be goofy fun has you wondering why you dug your Jaguar out of storage for this. The web site mentions it ain't MadBodies "until someone gets mad." Sorry, but it made me sad instead.

IDENTITY THEFT REPORT:

IDENTITY THEFT HITS 5-YEAR HIGH

Leader in I.D. Theft Protection Strikes Back with Free Protection Offer for All

TEMPE, ARIZONA – Identity theft has topped the Federal Trade Commission's list of consumer complaints for the past eight years.

Now, a stunning new survey shows a record 9.9 million Americans were victims of identity theft last year – a shocking 22% increase over the prior year – according to Javelin Strategy & Research. This news mirrors a just-released report from the Federal Trade Commission that cites a 21% increase in identity theft complaints during the same period.

Apparently, individual consumers are not the only ones at risk: a recent review cited by the Wall Street Journal reports that the cost of information breaches to U.S. companies was also on the rise, with the average total per-incident cost in 2008 rising to $6.65 million*.

These studies send a clear message: in the wake of the global economic crisis, identity theft is a big business. It's up to consumers to take proactive steps to protect themselves.

That's why for a limited time, LifeLock, the industry leader in identity theft protection, is offering 30 days of guaranteed identity theft protection service at no cost.

"All you have to do is call 1-877-748-7752 for an individual membership, or

1-877-425-5158 if you are enrolling more than one member," said Todd Davis, the CEO of LifeLock known for giving out his real Social Security number in advertising to show his confidence in the service. "It's that simple."

Immediately upon enrollment, all LifeLock members are protected by LifeLock's $1 Million Total Service Guarantee.

Why should you protect your identity? Consider some of the Javelin survey's specific findings:

According to the survey, more than one in every ten victims knew the person who stole their identity.

The Javelin survey also revealed women are 26% more likely to be victims than men. The survey also named higher income consumers (households with combined incomes of $75,000 or more) to be at higher risk. Latinos are 47% more likely to become victims of new account theft, versus 32% of all victims. It's important to point out that no one can stop all identity theft, but what LifeLock doesn't stop, they fix at their expense, up to $1 million.

To get LifeLock free for 30 days during this special offer, call 1-877-748-7752 for individual memberships, 1-877-425-5158 for multiple enrollments, and use promo code FREEMONTH.

"When I first learned about a company called LifeLock that protects families from identity theft, my husband was skeptical. I signed us up anyway, and forgot about it. A couple of months later, on a family vacation, my husband received a phone call asking if he was applying for a new credit card. Someone was trying to steal his identity. LifeLock had stopped the thief cold." Kim Barnes

"I'm a former chief of police of a major city. I knew identity theft was a $50 billion a year business, and a prime focus of organized crime. But they got me anyway. Even though I was a senior law enforcement official, it took weeks to clear my name. I decided: never again. A reporter recommended LifeLock to me and I tried them out. I've never had a problem since. I highly recommend them to you." Bobby Jo Harris

Classic Home Video Games, 1985-1988

A Complete Reference Guide

By Brett Weiss

Foreword by Bill Kunkel

ISBN 978-0-7864-3660-6

57 photos, glossary, bibliography, index

287pp. hardcover (7 x 10) 2009

Classic Home Video Games, 1985-1988 is a follow up to the 2007 Classic Home Video Games, 1972-1984. This reference work provides detailed descriptions and reviews of every U.S.-released game for the Nintendo NES, the Atari 7800, and the Sega Master System, all of which are considered among the most popular video game systems ever produced. Organized alphabetically by console brand, each chapter includes a description of the game system followed by substantive entries for every game released for that console. Video game entries include publisher/developer data, release year, gameplay information, and, typically, the author's critique. A glossary provides a helpful guide to the classic video game genres and terms referenced throughout the work, and a preface provides a comparison between the modern gaming industry and the industry of the late 1980s.

Former comic shop owner Brett Weiss lives in the Dallas/Fort Worth area. In addition to his reference books about classic home video games, he has written for numerous industry magazines, including Video Game Trader.

We are happy to be able to offer a four-page preview of this book for your reading pleasure. If you enjoy these sample pages please be sure to pick up a copy of the book via Amazon.com.

improve upon the brick-busting formula pioneered by Breakout by introducing hyperspace, chomping teeth, a space age theme, a screen-shake feature for freeing the ball from repetitive patterns (which is not a bad idea, actually), four horizontally scrolling playfields, and a triangular paddle that moves freely and can be inverted. Regrettably, sluggish gameplay, a distinct lack of challenge, and primitive audio/visuals (voice effects notwithstanding) ruin the experience. The storyline, which is purely superfluous, involves a renowned Star Fleet pilot getting attacked while researching (and then trying to escape from) a “lush, resource-rich world.” For a better Breakout-influenced game, players should try Arkanoid (arcade, NES).

Joust

PUBLISHER: Atari. DEVELOPER: General Computer Corp. Non-Scrolling Platform, 1 or 2 players (simultaneous). 1986.

Joust for the Atari 7800 is an admirable port of the 1982 Williams arcade classic, in which players fly a mounted ostrich around the screen, destroying buzzard riders by bumping into them from above (even slightly above gets the job done). The 7800 game features several details that the 5200 version left out, including the engine-like roar of enemies at the beginning of each level and the buzzards that fly in to pick up the riders that hatch from eggs (in the 5200 game, eggs simply hatch into riders that are already mounted atop buzzards). There is one setback regarding the 7800 controller, however, since pushing the side button again and again to keep the mounted ostrich afloat can get tiresome. To remedy this, players can simply plug in a 2600 joystick. Or play the NES version, which has better controls and more detailed characters. Also released for the Atari 2600 and Atari Lynx. Followed by: Joust 2: Survival of the Fittest (arcade). Similar to: Balloon Fight (NES).

Karateka

PUBLISHER: Atari. DEVELOPER: Ibid. Side-Scrolling Combat, 1 player. 1988.

Originally a computer game, Karateka for the 7800 lost something in translation. Players guide a karate expert through six levels of one-on-one fights against palace guards, punching and kicking (high and low) their way to victory. There are two stances: one for running and one for fighting. Unfortunately, victory is hard to achieve, thanks to a one-life setup and horrible, unresponsive, counterintuitive controls. The computer versions benefit from keyboard input, but there's no excuse for how poorly the 7800 rendition handles. Also, the graphics seem adequate at first glance, but then the characters start moving, thus revealing the game's choppy animation. The mission, for those unfortunate souls who chose to ac-let (which grants temporary invincibility), and a pogo stick-like fork. Other items to grab include candy (for health, ironically enough) and coins (for use in bonus stage slot machines). Mega Man fans should enjoy Panic Restaurant to some degree, but it's short and easy to beat.

Paperboy

PUBLISHER: Mindscape. DEVELOPER: Mindscape. Mission-Based Racing, 1 or 2 players (alternating). 1988.

Based on the wildly popular 1984 Atari arcade game, which stood out thanks to amusing voice effects, unusual gameplay, and a handlebars controller, Paperboy for the NES has players riding a bicycle up a narrow pathway consisting primarily of a sidewalk and the left side of the road, throwing newspapers at houses lining the left side of the screen. Hitting the windows of non-subscribers nets points, as does hitting the porches and paperboxes of subscribers. There are other targets as well, such as bushes, tombstones, and garbage cans, but numerous obstacles (including motorcycles, tornados, breakdancers, dogs, and cars) make things difficult. Aiming is tough, due in part to the game's isometric perspective. The game plays okay, but is a huge disappointment visually, especially when compared to the more colorful, more detailed, more faithfully ported Master System version. The NES game does add a two-player mode, but it lacks the trio of difficulty levels found in the arcades and Master System. Also released for the Game Boy, Atari Lynx, Genesis, Nintendo 64 (remade in 3D), and other systems.

Paperboy 2

PUBLISHER: Mindscape. DEVELOPER: Mindscape. Mission-Based Racing, 1 or 2 players (alternating). 1992.

The console sequel to the arcade classic Paperboy (Atari, 1984), Paperboy 2 features similar gameplay, but adds the following fresh wrinkles: new obstacles (including gargoyles, ghosts, and sewer monsters); new types of houses (including mansions, haunted houses, and kids' clubhouses); the choice to play as a female cyclist; and, most importantly, obstacles and houses on both sides of the road. As in Paperboy, levels are set up like days of the week, with each level ending in a bonus round. If the player misses hitting the porch or paperbox of a subscriber's house, that house becomes a non-subscriber. If the player hits every subscriber house in a level, a former subscriber will re-subscribe. Hitting non-subscribers' windows, runaway baby carriages, burglars, and other such targets nets extra points. Also released for the Genesis, SNES, Game Gear, and Game Boy.

Peek-A-Boo Poker

PUBLISHER: Panesian. DEVELOPER: Panesian. Gambling, 1 player. 1991.

One of three adult games produced by Panesian for the NES (Hot Slots and Bubble Bath Babes are the other two), Peek-A-Boo Poker is a poorly programmed, hard-to-find strip poker simulator that lets players select Paperboy is based on Atari's 1984 arcade game, but Paperboy 2 was only released for home systems, including the NES.

Packaged with the NES Power Set (which also included the Power Pad and the Zapper light gun), this game features three NES favorites in one cartridge: Super Mario Bros., Duck Hunt, and World Class Track Meet, the latter of which is the re-release of Bandai's Stadium Events.

Super Mario Bros. 2

PUBLISHER: Nintendo. DEVELOPER: Nintendo.
Side-Scrolling Platform, 1 player. 1988.

The U.S. sequel to Super Mario Bros., SMB2 is basically the same game as Yumekejo Doki Doki Panic for the Famicom (the Japanese NES), but the Arabian hero has been dropped in favor of Mario characters. Players guide Mario, Luigi, Toad, and/or Princess Toadstool through seven vast worlds, battling such oddball creatures as Tweeters, Snifits, Ninjis, Beezos, and Phantos. Instead of jumping on enemies like in SMB, the primary method of doing battle is to pick up (or pull up) items—including the enemies themselves—and throw them. Other differences include: magic potions for creating doorways to sub-spaces; keys for opening standard doors; a slot machine bonus game for winning extra lives; and mushroom blocks that players can pick up, move, and stand on. Although not as beloved as its progenitor, Super Mario Bros. 2 is a fun and challenging game.

Super Mario Bros. 3

PUBLISHER: Nintendo. DEVELOPER: Nintendo.
Side-Scrolling Platform, 1 or 2 players (alternating, simultaneous). 1990.

One of the most eagerly anticipated video games ever released, Super Mario Bros. 3 is also one of the best (and best selling) games for any console. Basic gameplay is similar to the original Super Mario Bros., but lots of new features have been added, including: a world map screen; a sliding attack; mini-games (including a memory match card game); an inventory system for power-ups; and various suits that enable Mario to turn into Raccoon Mario (fly, tail attack), Frog Mario (swim faster), or Tanooki Mario (fly, turn into statue). Also included is Battle Mode, which is a special version of the arcade classic, Mario Bros. Packaged with the NES Challenge Set (after the game had been sold individually for some time), Super Mario Bros. 3 was featured prominently in The Wizard (1989), which was essentially a feature-length commercial for the game and for the ill-fated Nintendo Power Glove. Followed by: Super Mario World (SNES), New Super Mario Bros. (Nintendo DS), and other sequels and offshoots.

Two legendary NES favorites: Super Mario Bros. and Super Mario Bros. 2, both complete with box, cartridge, and instruction manual.

station is derived from the original arcade game (Sega, 1986), which boasted four-player simultaneous action.

Publisher: Sega. Developer: Sega. Side-Scrolling Shooter, 1 player. 1988.

A phenomenal port of Nintendo's 1987 arcade game, which helped popularize the side-scrolling shooter, R-Type for the Master System even has a secret extra level not found in the coin-op classic (bringing the total to nine). Players meticulously guide the R-9 fighter spacecraft through the caves, cities, battleships, and buildings of the evil Bydo Empire, dodging obstacles (including walls) while firing away at exotic looking alien creatures, robots, and vessels. Holding the fire button down charges the ship's lasers, and there are six different power-ups to grab: speed; twin homing missiles; reflecting laser force; antiair laser force (ring-style laser shots); antiland laser force (shoots up and down, crawls along surfaces); and bit (two spheres that shoot pulse beams). Droid units can also be attached to the ship. The arcade original is faster, and certain details are missing (such as the laser beam meter), but this port squeezes as much out of the SMS as anyone should expect. Also released for the Game Boy and TurboGrafx-16. Followed by numerous sequels, including R-Type II (arcade), Super R-Type (SNES), and R-Type Final (PS2).

Rambo First Blood Part II

Publisher: Sega. Developer: Sega. Vertical Scrolling Shooter, 1 or 2 players (simultaneous). 1986.

Patterned after such games as Front Line, Ikari Warriors, and Commando, Rambo First Blood Part II has players, as Rambo, walking through six overhead-view levels (Jungle, Forest, Swamp, Desert, Mountain, and Seacoast), blowing up concentration camps, rescuing comrades, and shooting infantrymen, artillery men, knife soldiers, snipers, flame throwers, rocket launchers, and other enemies. Rambo is armed with an M-60 and a limited supply of arrow-bombs. The action moves slowly, but the enemies and their firepower crowd the screen, making for an extremely difficult game. A second player can join in to make things a bit easier (not to mention more enjoyable). Based on the 1985 feature film, which starred Sylvester Stallone in the titular role.

Rambo III

Publisher: Sega. Developer: Sega. Light Gun Shooter, 1 player. 1988. VGT

Although there was no video game based on the original First Blood, Rambo First Blood Part II and Rambo III did make it to the Master System.

Vintage Games

An Insider Look at the History of Grand Theft Auto, Super Mario, and the Most Influential Games of All Time

By Bill Loguidice & Matt Barton, distributed by Focal Press

Vintage Games, available from retailers worldwide, is a full color, illustrated book, that explores the greatest and most influential videogames of all time, including Super Mario Bros., Grand Theft Auto III, Doom, The Sims, and many more. While each chapter's focus revolves around the game title in question, precursors, clones, sequels, gameplay and mechanics, and the genre itself are discussed, along with plenty of quotes, references and full color illustrations.

Vintage Games is proof, once again, that the shorter your main title is, the longer your subtitle should be.

What is this book about? Take a game that was so original and ground-breaking that it paved the way to creating entirely new genres. The authors tell you about this ground breaking design by introduce the game in questions, explaining what it did and how it defied other games of its genre, show the history of the game over the years, and finally tell the reader which modern games are influenced by them today.

Repeat that for 408 pages and I just summarized the book for you.

However, the games featured in this book are not what you would expect. Sure you have the big hitters like Doom, Super Mario Bros., and Final Fantasy VII. But some other games are highlighted that you wouldn't expect to make an impact. Like Flight Simulator, Dune II, and Ultima (both on-line and off). It was interesting to see how these games meld their way into other genres, and for most of the modern gamers this will be a nice read about something that they are not completely familiar with.

There is also a ton of bonus content on-line for you to access. The Authors have released bonus chapters not found in the book online at ArmChairArcade.com/vintagegames. They include; Pong, Pinball Construction Set, Tony Hawk's Pro Skater, Elite, Rogue, Spacewar!, Defender, Robotron:

2084 and Star Raiders. For those on the fence about buying the book, the online content will give you a good indication of what is inside the book, so if you enjoy the stuff on the site, expect the same in the book.

The layout of the book is really nice, and the color images are something I was pleasantly surprised to see. The screen shots looked great in color and stood out in each chapter. This is unusual in most books out today, but I applaud the authors for realizing the potential its pictures would make and allowing the reader to see everything in color.

There are many good things to appreciate about this book, however reading it from cover to cover is dull beyond belief. It's written more like a technical book, that's not meant to be read from cover to cover to begin with.

In the end I really can't recommend this book for everyone. The book is good reference piece for the video game history buffs, but the presentation makes it more a chore for a casual reader.

HIDDEN GEMS

Back in the day as a gamer, you were the coolest kid on the block if you owned an SNK Neo-Geo AES (Advanced Entertainment System) home system. Since the AES was essentially the "home version" of SNK's arcade hardware, the MVS (Multi Video System), and re-tailed for about $649.99 for the gold package, you were the talk of the town.

To this day the Neo-Geo remains a very highly desirable system among classic gaming collectors and is a real show piece for one's collection.

There were a lot of popular titles available on the Neo-Geo platform like Samurai Show-down and Metal Slug, but like any system, there are always great games that slip through the cracks. One of SNK's Hidden Gems is a side scrolling platform game in the vein of Super Mario Bros. called Blue's Journey, also known as Raguy in Japan. It was developed by Alpha Denshi, who designed several other hits for SNK including Magician Lord and World Heroes and released into the arcades and for the home in 1991.

Blue's Journey is a unique, fast paced and colorful side scrolling adventure that has you playing as the loveable Insectarian Blue, who's on a quest to save his planet, Raguy, from the pollutions left by the intruding Daruma Tribe. Through the 6 area zones, you sport a leaf as your main weapon to fight enemies including lizards, Vikings and birds that drop rocks on you from above. Blue's attacks consist of throwing his leaf at the creatures, which knocks them upside down, allowing you to pick them up and throw them at other enemies on the screen, killing them Super Mario Bros. 2 style, baby. You can also power up your leaf weapon to dish out a heavier attack. Along the way you'll also come across another power up allows you to light up and destroy enemies as you run through them similar to the Star Man power in Super Mario Bros. There are other additional weapons that can be had such as boomerangs and bombs.

As you progress through the levels, you'll collect flowers which are used as currency to purchase extra items at shops. Items include Fins to swim faster, a Light Safe to protect your items, Honey for extra stamina, Spikes and Ocarinas. You will also run into characters in the game that can assist you if you have enough flower money. For example, there's a shoe keeper that's found further along in the game that can dispell a curse that's placed upon you from a witch that flits about the levels. In another area shop, you can rent one of a variety of boats to take a quick ride across the level, if you have enough money.

The general game play itself is comparable to other platformers like Super Mario World. You have 238 seconds to complete each level, which end by jumping on a huge plant. The higher you jump, the more points you receive (sound familiar?). After every couple levels you are faced with a boss battle. One of the things that sets the game play apart from other titles is that Blue can switch his body size from big to small depending on what the level design calls for, allowing for some extra cool game play and new ways to conquer a level.

There is some replay value to be had from Blue's Journey. Having a good score makes the difference between a good ending or a bad one. When you get the high score, you live happily ever after while having a very low score will get you the cold shoulder from the princess. You get a special ending while your cursed and if you challenged your rival early in the game. He will challenge you again and you must fight for the princess's affection. Blue's Journey also features a Co-op mode, so be ready to plug in your extra Neo-Geo Joystick or Wii Mote (as the game is now available on the Virtual Console for the Nintendo Wii) and have a friend take control of Blue's green colored buddy.

In closing, Blue's Journey is a Hidden Gem for the Neo-Geo because there were very few platformers in the arcade and on the AES system. It was sadly over looked by a lot of gamers who knew the Neo-Geo for its shooters and beat'em ups. A lot of people complain about Blue's Journey's graphics as it looks more like it was made for the Sega Genesis or Super Nintendo. Judging it solely on its graphics is unfair as it's a fun and awesome game. Besides, in all honesty, the graphics are part of Blue's charm and fits for this genre of game for the time. Blue's Journey can also be found on the Neo-Geo CD (1994) and the Wii Virtual Console (2007) for 900 Wii Points. Be sure to track down Blue's Journey and enjoy some simple and fun old-school side scrolling goodness.

Debuting in 1983, Cinematronics' Dragon's Lair Arcade expanded and redefined our definition of video games away from just crudely drawn flickering blocks, with the advent of fresh, detailed, cinema-style animation. Leaving the squared bits of quarter-munchers behind, developer Advanced Microcomputer Systems, along with animator Don Bluth, utilized the storage capacity of the laserdisc format to essentially produce the first interactive cartoon. Even today, Dragon's Lair is a movie that plays like a game or, perhaps, a game that plays like a movie.

While not as revolutionary as the arcade's interactive-movie formula but no less adventurous, CSG Imagesoft's Nintendo Entertainment System port of Dragon's Lair also experimentally probed the boundaries of play control until it was no longer just a transparent aspect of gaming. Through restricting the movement of the on-screen character, the gameplay of the NES Dragon's Lair is not a blemish on developer MotiveTime, Ltd., but a link to the film-inspired arcade counterpart, its comedy relief, and a visual personification of Dirk's geeky personality.

In order to comprehend the concept that the control of Dragon's Lair provides more than just the ability to function, it must first be established that the arcade Dragon's Lair, more so than other games, follows the rules of a movie. Because it follows the rules of a movie, it can only have one path to the end. You can't control a movie; it will proceed without your involvement. Dragon's Lair retains this idea but with minimal additional control: if you do decide to deter from its one-way path, you'll die.

This was instituted by having the player adjust the joystick at correct, precise intervals to advance, not at his/her own discretion. For example, Donkey Kong gave the player the freedom to move Mario at any point that the player deemed best to circumvent a barrel. He/she can jump the object or hit it with a hammer, because both decisions will eliminate the obstruction. However, conquering Dragon's Lair requires memorizing the only moments in which you can maneuver Dirk the Daring through his stumbling and fumbling of Princess Daphnie's rescue. If Donkey Kong were Dragon's Lair, Mario would only be able to jump the barrel and he'd only be able to do it at a certain moment.

As detested as it may be now, this choose-your-own-path gameplay of Dragon's Lair is faithfully recreated to fit the Nintendo, albeit stripped down to fit 2-D proportions. Move incorrectly, duck at the wrong moment, and you're deteriorated. If you don't jump, duck, crawl, stand up, jump, then crawl in that order when confronted with a deceptively difficult obstacle of two swinging chains positioned at Dirk's legs and face, you'll lose. Any other order will take up too much time, since coming into contact with the objects will cost an extra life.

Like it or not, that's Dragon's Lair.

By forcing the player to respond in Dirk's frantically slow motion, Dragon's Lair simulates, with some amazing animation, the slapstick comedy so prevalent in its arcade counterpart. As with the laserdisc version, which highlights the awkwardness of the character's movement through the reaction to his enemies, Dirk, thanks to animation that follows each painstakingly minute detail, wobbles through each near-death situation by barely escaping the clutches of his demise. It's not so much that the hero is purposely avoiding the enemies, but that he's just getting lucky... each time.

This also argues that the controls are actually a flawed characteristic of Dirk. He's a tall, gawky nerd who luckily succeeds in his profession in spite of his shortcomings. Because of which, his character walks as he is: a leisurely moving, hesitant anti-hero. Had he had the reflexes of a Mario or a Sonic, he'd be someone else entirely, a brave unflinching soul ravaging through the unknown dangers that lay ahead of him. If the developers made Dirk to play like Sonic, a brazen, unafraid speed-demon, it would have been uncharacteristic. It wouldn't be Dirk. And, again, it wouldn't be Dragon's Lair.

Reviewers didn't take much of this into consideration, mostly languishing on its atypical controls and hyping its graphical achievements. Nintendo Power, which, contrary to popular thought, did dole out poor scores, dished out a 3.9¹ (out of a possible 5) for its graphics. Its play control earned a bottom-scraping 2.1 and its fun hit a respectable 3.4. However, its challenge landed it a confusing 3.0, putting it well below the 4.3 for Deja Vu and tying it with the basketball game, Arch Rivals (Silver Surfer, an equally frustrating cartridge managed a 2.9 for challenge that same issue).

GamePro bestowed a perfect 5² (out of 5) for graphics, a 4 in sound, and a 3 in the remaining gameplay, fun, and challenge. Despite its average rating in difficulty, the review by Charlie T. Asian begins with "Dragons' Lair, the latest NES cartridge from CSG Imagesoft, can be summed up in one word - YEARRRRRRGH!" It later states that "[t]he NES version of Dragon's Lair has a couple of things in common with its arcade predecessor - brilliant graphics and a high frustration factor." An odd statement to make when compared to its scores.

In an almost perfect review, Jeff Rovin, in his book How to Win at Nintendo Games 4, gave Dragon's Lair an overall A-³. Its graphics, sound, and simulation all achieved an A, with, oddly enough, its challenge hitting its lowest grade, a B+. His glowing assessment begins with "[s]pectacular graphics and tough gameplay make this a superior, almost Genesislike cartridge." While he does comment on the controls, he ends by stating that it shouldn't deter from your enjoyment.

Dragon's Lair, for the NES, struggles to this day to find more fans, like Rovin. Nearly twenty years since its release, and online experts such as the Angry Video Game Nerd crying expletives at Dragon Lair's control, people still seem to miss that it's awkward controls are not the downfall of the game, but its shining individualistic essence.

Price Guide Introduction * Atari 2600

Welcome to Video Game Trader's Price Guide. Our values reflect what you should expect to pay for an item on the open market. Please remember that we are human. If you see a common game for $400 or a rarity for $1, please let us know. It's probably just a mistake.

How to read the guide

The Guide is split apart by "Generation." In each generation we may have special lists that will appear in this issue only.

If we have updated or changed a price you will see a "+" or a "-" next to the price for each item. "+" indicates a price increase, while "-" indicates a price decrease. An "[HB]" designation next to a game means that this title is a HomeBrew game. We may list prices for complete games (CIB - Games with original case, manual and any maps), game only (Loose - cartridge or cd only), or both may appear in the listing.

All prices assume that the games are clean (no rental stickers or markings). For complete games, it is assumed that all contents are clean and free of markings. This guide reflects USED/PREOWNED games only.

Please provide any feedback by emailing us at vgtnj@aol.com.

Our complete price guide is also available on the iPhone and iPod Touch. Please search iTunes or the App Store for "video game price guide".

Second Generation

In the history of video games, the second generation (sometimes referred to as the early 8 bit or 4 bit era) began in 1976 with the release of the Fairchild Channel F.

The Atari 2600 was the dominant console for much of the second generation, with consoles such as the Intellivision, Odyssey 2, and ColecoVision also enjoying market share.

The second generation came to an abrupt end in 1984 amid the video game crash of 1983.

Sixth Generation

The sixth-generation era (128-bit) refers to video games and handhelds available at the turn of the 21st century. Platforms include Sega's Dreamcast, Sony's PlayStation 2, the Nintendo GameCube, and Microsoft's Xbox. This era began with the release of the Dreamcast.

Sony's PlayStation 2 achieved sales dominance with over 140 million sold as of mid-July 2008, making it the best-

★ TWINKLESTAR ★ SPRITES

This month I'll be talking about one of my favorite games, Twinkle Star Sprites. Twinkle Star Sprites was released on the Neo-Geo MVS and AES in 1996 by ADK, who also made games like Aggressors of Dark Combat, Ninja Masters and World Heroes.

The only time Twinkle Star Sprites was re-released in America was on the Neo-Geo MVS arcade unit, which was poorly translated to the point that they didn't even translate the end credits. So sit back, grab some Pocari sweat and let us take a look at the original Twinkle Star Sprites.

Twinkle Star Sprites is unlike any game out there. It's a hybrid of a "Vs Puzzle" game, like Poyo Pop and a vertical SHMUP. The game is easy to play but very hard to master. Twinkle Star Sprites stars a little girl named Lord Run and her trusty sidekick Rabbicat. (A Cat/Rabbit, like Ryo-Ohki from Tenchi Muyo) Run is on a quest to find the Twinkle Star which has the power to make your dreams come true. Of course, other people are out to get it and that's pretty much the reason why you're fighting others in the game. Since it's a shooter, it doesn't really matter what the story is. The game uses a really cutesy art style which causes many people to call the game a "Cute em' Up." I really hate when Twinkle Star Sprites is called that because, underneath all of the cute characters and pastel colors, lies a really deep and challenging two player game. The music of the game is also cutesy. It's got some catchy tunes but nothing you'd listen to in the car. The characters also have their own voices and they'll say different things depending on how they're doing in the game.

The game's set up is a standard SHMUP. You use two buttons, one for your normal shot (which can be charged up, but more on that later) and the second one for a bomb of which each character has two of (but can earn more in the battle). The game's screen is split into two sides for each player. Random items like stars and clouds will fly out in grouped patterns which you have to shoot down. When you destroy them, they blow up and cause a chain reaction that sets off any others objects near them. Doing this builds up your combo to which you use to attack the other player. A normal four chain combo will send out a deadly fireball to the other player's side in an attempt to hit them. The more chains you cause, the more fireballs get sent to the other side of the screen. You can also use the explosions from the chain reactions you have to counter the fireballs being sent towards you. If you get them into your combo, those fireballs get sent back to the other player along with the fireballs from your new combo causing the screen to get really hectic. The fun doesn't stop there: if you send back your opponent's counters, you'll set off your character's special attack. Each character has their own unique attack. Lord Run for example will send out little explosive Rabbicats that fly behind your opponent and explode. Others will send out stuff in front of you to try and hit you or block your shots.

While you're racking up the combos, your power meter will begin to build up your shot power. You can either tap the shoot button for rapid fire shots or charge it up for a bigger attack with three levels. The first level just clears out stuff in front of you but won't cause any chain reactions. The second level will send out your character's special attack. If you build the special attack all the way up to level three, you can then send out your boss character. There's two ways to call out a boss character. The first is, as I said before, by building up your shot meter. The other way is by getting a big chain of combos and counter attacks. Each character has their own boss that comes out and tries to attack the other player. Some shoot out stars and breath fire while others will try to dive bomb you, killing you instantly. If a boss comes out, your best bet is to try to bomb it or counter attack it by sending out your own boss against the other player. Only one boss can be out on the screen at one time, so it's fun to try to build up as many combos as you can to call out the boss to beat down your opponent. That's pretty much the basics of Twinkle Star Sprites. Fly around, try to get as many combos as you can and try to figure the other player's strategy out before they figure yours out.

While Twinkle Star Sprites is virtually unknown here in America, over in Japan the game has a very solid following.

Twinkle Star Sprites has been ported over to a few consoles. After its run on the Neo-Geo MVS, Neo-Geo AES and Neo-Geo CD, the game was ported over to the Sega Saturn. The Saturn version came with two disks. The first disk included a new animated intro video, arranged soundtrack (which was featured on the Neo-Geo CD version), extra voices for all of the characters story mode cut scenes and a new character exclusive to the Saturn version named Meirin. The game suffered from load times and some slowdown, but it's still a good port of the game. The second disk was a "Fan Disk" that included more dialog from the characters, artwork from the creators and fans and even a Karaoke music video to sing along too. In 1999 Twinkle Star Sprites was ported to the Sega Dreamcast. Sadly, it's just a straight port of the arcade game with the arranged soundtrack. It has better load times then the Neo-Geo CD and Saturn ports, plus the slowdown can even be turned off, but it's odd that they left out all the extras that the Saturn version had.

Almost ten years after the initial Twinkle Star Sprites release, SNK/Playmore resurrected the series on the Playstation 2. Twinkle Star Sprites: La Petite Princess was more of a remake then a sequel. The game had a different main character, named Time, and some of the characters from the first game were replaced with some new characters. The game played the same way as the original, but this time with 3D characters, backgrounds and an even more cutesy art style. The game's characters were all voiced by professional anime voice-over actresses. Some of the unlockable extras include a poorly ported version of the original Neo-Geo game and an art gallery of the new characters as well as the Sega Saturn's intro video. If you lived in Japan you could also play the game online, but sadly that function doesn't work if you're in America.

The best way to get any version of Twinkle Star Sprites is to import it. Naturally the Japanese AES game is the most expensive with prices between $600 -700. The Neo-Geo CD version goes for around $60-85 while the Saturn version will run you between $40-60. The Dreamcast version varies in price and can be seen going from around $60-100. La Petite Princess was recently released under SNK/Playmore's Best Hits Collection in Japan and you can pick it up for $35. The original Neo-Geo MVS version of the game was included in the ADK collection called ADK Tamashii on the PS2 in Japan and sells for around $60. That game not only includes Twinkle Star Sprites but some of ADK's other classics like Ninja Masters, Ninja Commando and Aggressors of Dark Combat.

So if you're in the mood for a unique shooter that you can play with your friends, check out Twinkle Star Sprites. If you can make it past its overly cute characters and graphics, you'll discover it to be a really interesting game that's more fun when you play it with a friend.

ROM Hacking

Part II:

ROM Hacking Strikes Back!

In my last article on ROM hacking (Issue #6 June 2008) we discussed graphical hacking, which unfortunately was the easy part. In this article I'm going to discuss editing in-game text as this is how translations are made. However, in order to edit text you need to understand the hexadecimal number system ("hex" for short). The problem with hex is that, much like religion, it's inherently dull. Studies on hex are usually reserved for large textbooks that make a very loud creaking sound when opened. We are in luck, however, because the subjects covered in this article will only require you to understand how to count in hex; a fairly simple task providing you already understand the concept of counting!

All Your Base Are Belong To Us

IBM was the first to use hex in computing (so all hate mail should be addressed to them) because it allows large numbers to be represented using less digits, which in turn uses less memory. The common number system taught today is, of course, the decimal system. The decimal system is base 10 and consists of the numbers 0 – 9. Most people speculate that the reason the decimal system is so popular is because we have 10 fingers. On a side note, the Mayans used a base 20 number system, so it's possible that the Mayans liked counting their fingers and toes! While you may not have thought of it this way, the tens place in the decimal system simply tells us how many groups of 10 are in our number. Therefore the number 42 will have 4 groups of 10 and 2 singles. Next the hundreds place tells us how many groups of 10 * 10, or 100, we have in our number, the thousands place represents groups of 10 * 10 * 10 and so on. For example, the decimal number 5842 can be represented as follows

$$(5 * 103) + (8 * 102) + (4 * 101) + (2 * 100) =$$

$$(5000) + (800) + (40) + (2) =$$

I know this is a confusing way to think about the decimal system, but trust me, understanding this concept makes comprehending other number systems (such as hex) much easier. Hex is simply a different way of grouping numbers, so don't think of it as anything else. The only difference between hex and the decimal system (other than having a cooler name) is that hex is a base 16 number system. Hex consists of the numbers 0 – 15, represented as 0, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, A, B, C, D, E, F. Therefore, if I write the number B in hex, it means the same thing as 11 in the decimal system. Furthermore, if I need to represent the decimal number 16 in hex, its 10, and decimal 17 in hex is 11, and so on. Pretty easy huh? Now consider this, if I were to write the hexadecimal number E64A, it can be represented as follows:

$$(E * 103) + (6 * 102) + (4 * 101) + (A * 100) =$$

$$(E000) + (600) + (40) + (A) =$$

E64A

(Just remember your calculating this in hex, not decimal, so the 10 is equivalent to 16 in decimal)

The process of converting E64A to decimal isn't too complicated so let's look at the beginning of our equation:

$$(E * 103) + (6 * 102) + (4 * 101) + (A * 100)$$

To convert this into decimal we simply replace each hexadecimal number with its decimal equivalent, and add them together, so E64A will be:

$$(E * 103) + (6 * 102) + (4 * 101) + (A * 100) =$$

$$(14 * 163) + (6 * 162) + (4 * 161) + (10 * 160) =$$

$$(57344) + (1536) + (64) + (10) =$$

Last, if we want to convert 58954 back to hex, it is easier to use what I call the "divide and conquer" approach. You begin by dividing your decimal number by its largest place, which in our case is 163, or 4096. Therefore $58954 / 4096 = 14.393$. We are only concerned with the whole number 14, so we know the first digit in our answer is the hex equivalent to 14, which is E. Next we subtract our answer, 14, multiplied by its place value, 4096, from our original number 58954. This can be represented as $58954 - 57344 = 1610$. We then take our remaining answer, 1610, and divide it by 162, or 256. This gives us the answer 6.289; again we are only concerned with the whole number, the 6. So the next digit in our hexadecimal number is 6, giving us the running answer E6. Now we multiply 6 by its place value, 256 and subtract the answer from 1610. This can be represented as $1610 - 1536 = 74$. Hopefully you recognize the pattern. We now divide 74 by its place value, 161, or simply 16, this gives us the answer 4.625, again, we are only concerned with the whole number 4, which is the next number in our answer, giving us the running answer E64. Now we multiply 4 by its place value 16 and subtract the answer from 74. This can be represented as $74 - 64 = 10$. Since the 10 is in the 160 place we don't need to do anything to it except convert it to hex, which is A, and is the final digit of our answer, giving us the final answer E64A.

So that's it. The math lesson is over! If you understand everything I've explained so far then you're well ahead of the game. If you don't understand it completely, you're not alone; it usually takes people a lot of practice to get these concepts down. If you'd like more information regarding number systems I recommend reading Assembly Language: Step-By-Step, by Jeff Duntemann. Duntemann has a way of explaining number systems that is actually entertaining and simple and his books don't make annoying creaking sounds when you open them.

Hey, I Thought This Article Was About Hacking

Now we can finally get to some hacking! Before we get started I would like to point out that RomHacks.net, specifically <http://www.romhacks.net>, was an invaluable resource when creating this tutorial and I recommend anyone interested in ROM hacking go there and check it out.

In order to hack the ROM text we will use a program called WindHex, which is available at <http://www.romhacks.net/tools/WindHex.zip>. WindHex is a program that will display the code used in our ROM in hexadecimal format. So what we need is a ROM which has some text we can change and that text should have the letter "A" in it. Luckily this is pretty common because most games have the phrase "GAME OVER" in them somewhere. In this tutorial, I'm going to hack one of my all time favorite games, "Double Dragon". "Double Dragon" displays the word "1PLAYER" on the opening screen, so we have the "A" we were looking for.

In order to hack this game, in WindHex, we will go to File / Open File For Editing and select "Double Dragon" from the menu. You will notice three columns displaying different types of information. The first column is the line number (which is used to help locate information), the second column displays the hexadecimal code in two digit chunks and the third displays the text equivalent to the hexadecimal code. We know that we need to find the word "1PLAYER" to get started, so we will go to Search / Relative Search, and type the word "1PLAYER" in the box (don't include the quotes). A box entitled Data List will now pop up. This box has some useful information; it will state which line the hex equivalent to the word "1PLAYER" is stored on, which will be the series of digits preceded by the "$" symbol. It will state the word we looked up, which is of course "1PLAYER", and it will list the hex values for certain digits, which for us is the value for "A", "a", and "0". We will focus on the "A" for this tutorial, which has the value of 41.

You will need to go through this procedure with each game you edit, because the hexadecimal equivalents will be different in each game. Please note that this doesn't work with all ROMs because some games don't have the text stored as standard text. Now that we know 41 represents the letter "A" in "Double Dragon" we need to create a table file. A table file will hold all the hexadecimal letter values for our game and will make editing text much easier. A table file is created using a text editor so do not use Microsoft Word! Most people use Notepad, but I prefer Notepad2 which is available for download at <http://www.flos-freeware.ch/notepad2.html>. I prefer Notepad2 because it doesn't automatically try to save files with the .txt extension, it displays line numbers and it has automatic formatting when coding. The hexadecimal values for letters are usually saved in ascending order, therefore if the value for "A" is 41, the value for "B" should be 42. So in our text editor the first line we should type is "41=A", the second line should be "42=B", and so on until you reach "Z" (Don't use the quotation marks in the file). We will call the file "DoubleDragon.tbl" and save it where ever that's convenient for you. Just remember, all table files need to have the .tbl extension.

To use the table file in WindHex, with the "Double Dragon" ROM still loaded, we will go to File / Open Table File / Table #1 and select "DoubleDragon.tbl" from the menu. You will notice that the values in your third WindHex column will change. Now go to Edit and select Hex / Text Edit Mode. This will allow you to edit text from the third column. Next go to Search à Text Search and type "PLAYER" in the box. We were actually searching for "1PLAYER", but since we haven't defined "1" in our table file, it won't show up. The cursor will move to the first instance of the word "PLAYER", which will be in the third column. Now you can edit the word "PLAYER" by clicking on it in the third column and, with caps lock on, simply typing in text! However the length of the text cannot exceed the length of the word you are replacing.

I have replaced the word "PLAYER" with the word "GOOBER" and now that were done we need to save the ROM with a new name. Go to File à Save File As and type the new name of the ROM in the menu. I'm going to use the name "DoubleDragonGoober.nes". It's important to remember to use the proper extension when saving your game, which is ".nes" for us.

Last it's time to open the ROM in an emulator and check it out. After opening it, I can see the player selection screen now states "1GOOBER", which means we have successfully hacked the text in "Double Dragon"!

That's all there is to hacking the text in a ROM, just remember that you are not limited to upper case letters for your table files. You could also find the values for the numbers, punctuation and white space, which can all be stored in your table file. That wraps up this article, now get hacking!

Every issue, Video Game Trader strives to bring you the best coverage of classic games out there. We, like you, love the nostalgia of reading about treasured games, but we would be remiss if we didn't take a look at some of video gaming's worst and finally bury them for good.

R.O.B. (NES) – “He helps you tackle even the toughest challenge!” promised the ad way back in 1984. Though even in the commercial, he wasn't referred to as your Robotic Operating Buddy, maybe because it was just too embarrassing to say, or perhaps because even Nintendo knew that this amalgamation of plastic and metal would be a buddy to no one. R.O.B. was slow, noisy, and in Stack-Up, one of only two games that supported your robot buddy, he wasn't even necessary to play, acting as more of a hindrance than help.

The Power Glove (NES) – Yes, I was among the hundred thousand or so that was tricked into a controller so imprecise, so useless that it makes the Wii Remote look like a work of genius. Easily the most promising and yet most useless thing sold by Nintendo for the Entertainment System, the power glove wasn't needed by any game in particular. Both games featuring power glove control were playable with the standard NES controller, though why anyone would want to is beyond me. Aside, of course, from getting a laugh out of Bad Street Brawler's homoerotic undertones in special moves like crotch tickle, or as the game called it, “trip”. Perhaps Lucas Barton said it best in the Wizard. “I love the Power Glove, it's so bad”. Yes it is Lucas, yes it is.

Atari Jaguar Controller (Jaguar) – Imagine if you will, a controller more uncomfortable than that of the Dreamcast and original Xbox, but with the added bonus of having more buttons in worse spots than either. That's right, shell out $250 for the latest and greatest in gaming and get not only Cybermorph, the downright unacceptably bad pack-in game, but the worst controller ever to come with a system. 12 buttons in the center, laid out like a phone, and unreachable with the thumb of anyone under the age of 16. Never fear, in case the phone style buttons are too difficult to remember, games often came with flimsy and easily lost plastic covers for the buttons featuring icons and color schemes designed by someone who very clearly hated his job.

Sega Activator (Genesis) – Not content to learn from the mistakes of others, Sega released the Sega Activator, a control device for those who want to make their games pointlessly difficult, and break some furniture in the process. Essentially an octagonal series of infrared beams, players use their hands and feet to break the beams, sending controller signals to the Genesis. Setup aside, the actual functionality of the controller for games in the advertisement is completely ludicrous. As a simple example, Johnny Cage's “Green Flame” attack in Mortal Kombat (Back, Forward, Back, Low Punch) would require the player to extend their left hand, to send the back command, then retract it and stick out their right for forward, then their left again and finally shoot an arm almost straight back to execute the low punch. Street Fighter would have been even worse with the amount of quarter circles thrown in that game, though I would pay good money to see someone with an Activator execute Zangief's “Spinning Piledriver”.

Konami LaserScope (NES) – As a kid, I enjoyed the amazing games that utilized the Nintendo Zapper. From Duck Hunt to Hogan's Alley, I found them enthralling. As much as I loved the games, I knew the Zapper was a problem. It worked really well, rarely shooting somewhere I wasn't aiming, had a simple trigger interface that didn't challenge me, and above all, I looked far too cool using it. Great minds think alike though, and the great minds at Konami saw fit to introduce the LaserScope. Compatible with all the games that I previously used the Zapper for, and without all the nagging issues, not only was it unnecessary, but unwieldy too. Best of all though, everyone that wore it looked like a total twit.

U-Force (NES) – Ah, it all comes back to the good ol' NES. If failed peripherals counts, then Nintendo of America has surely earned their Collections merit badge. There are a lot of stinkers in that collection, but the absolute crowning jewel is without a shadow of a doubt Broderbund's U-Force controller. “So hot, no one can touch it.” While there were a lot of misleading commercials back then, wireless controllers that worked even while facing away from the TV, and that whole power glove thing, the U-Force was the worst. It's not that the controller didn't work as advertised, that would have been a welcome relief. The U-Force just plain didn't work. After saving a full summer and choosing between a new game and a new controller, I at least learned an important lesson. The Nintendo Seal of Quality means absolutely dick. As always, bury this useless hunk of plastic six feet under.

TOKEN APPRECIATION

Despite the fact that Sega dominated arcades across Japan and America throughout the 1980s, the company spent the majority of that same decade trailing miserably in home console wars. Sega's arcade releases read like a Who's Who list of arcade classics (Frogger, Zaxxon, Congo Bongo, Hang-On, Choplifter, Wonder Boy, Out Run, Shinobi, and After Burner, just to name a few), but their 8-Bit Sega Master System was never able to gain anywhere near the popularity of the competing Nintendo Entertainment System. Toward the end of the decade, Sega borrowed hardware from its successful System-16 arcade system and released the 16-Bit Mega Drive, which hit Japanese shelves in October of 1988. For its American debut, the console was rebranded the Sega Genesis, and arrived in stores on August 14, 1989. With a strong desire to both gain marketplace shares and show off the system's superior 16-Bit hardware, Sega decided to port Altered Beast (one of its most popular arcade titles at that time) to the new system and include it as the pack-in launch title.

In the arcade version of Altered Beast, one or two players must fight their way through multiple waves of creepy dead guys to rescue Athena, the daughter of Zeus. The real fun in this side-scroller begins when players destroy one of the magical two-headed wolves that dispense magical blue "power-up" orbs. Collecting one or two orbs makes your character look like bodybuilding muscle men Hans and Frans, while the third transforms your character into a mythical beast. Depending on the level, you'll end up as a dragon, tiger or bear (oh my!), and gain super smashing powers as you literally unleash your inner beast.

Along with Golden Axe, Alien Syndrome and Shinobi, Altered Beast dazzled arcade visitors with detailed graphics and superb sound, thanks to Sega's System-16 board. Powered by Motorola's 68000 chip and using a Z80 for sound, the System-16 contained cutting edge hardware. Porting such an advanced game to a home console could have been a dangerous move, as a weak conversion could have spelled disaster for Sega's Genesis launch. Although both the Genesis and the System-16 shared similar hardware, the Genesis was definitely the weaker of the two. For example, even though both systems shared Motorola's 68000 16-Bit processor, the System-16 board ran at 10 MHz while the Genesis ran at a much slower 7.67 MHz; and while the Genesis had a 512-color palette and could display up to 80 sprites at a time, the System-16 could handle 128 simultaneous sprites and had 4,096 colors to choose from. That's not to say that the Genesis wasn't technically advanced; it was, especially with its only real competition at the time being the TurboGrafx-16 (it would take Nintendo two more years to launch their 16-Bit console, the Super Nintendo). What it did mean, however, was that Altered Beast had to be rewritten in order to take full advantage of the Genesis platform. The end result, especially at the time of its release, was a very impressive game.

There are differences between the arcade and home versions, to be sure. Graphics on the arcade version are better, with each character appearing larger, containing more detail, and possessing more frames of animation which resulted in smoother action. The System-16 arcade board was also capable of producing better sound than the Genesis, giving the arcade version richer music, better sound effects and clearer digitized speech.

That being said, Sega did an overall fabulous job on the home version of the game. Using current methods of emulation you can easily flip back and forth between both the Genesis and arcade versions of the game and spot major differences. However, back in the late 1980s when the only way to compare the two would have involved driving, biking or walking to the nearest arcade, I suspect the nuances between the two versions would have been more difficult to spot. The Genesis version has quite a going for it: it includes all five levels from the arcade, contains music, sound effects, and digitized speech, has all the same enemies, and supports multiple players. Additionally, the Genesis version includes parallax scrolling (multiple layers moving at different speeds to give the illusion of depth), something the original is lacking.

There is one other way in which the home version is far superior to the arcade version. As a method of preventing would-be bootleggers from pirating, removing or disassembling code stored within their arcade games, Sega developed an encryption system which was backed by a battery. Removing the battery or main chips from the board would cause the encryption/decryption system to fail, thus protecting the game's code. What Sega did not consider was that the batteries used have a finite life span. These batteries, now lovingly referred to as "suicide batteries", power the decryption keys to the game. When (not if) the battery fails, the board is rendered useless. To make matters worse, the batteries are soldered directly on to the game's printed circuit board (PCB), making them difficult to replace. The only way to fix a dead PCB is to replace the old encrypted chips with new decrypted EPROMs. The next time someone mentions to you how superior the arcade version of Altered Beast was to the Genesis release, remind them that millions of Altered Beast Genesis cartridges are still working and can be picked up for pennies in almost any thrift store.

Altered Beast was everything Sega needed in a Genesis launch title. The game's graphics and sound blew away any and all 8-Bit competitors and announced, with a roar, Sega's 16-Bit arrival. The Genesis version of Altered Beast continues to live on even today. It appeared in the Sega Smash Pack (Windows/Dreamcast), on the Sega Genesis Collection for the PS2 (which also contains the original arcade version), and most recently as a download for the Wii's Virtual Console. "Rise from your grave," indeed.

GET YOUR KICKS FROM QIX

The screen flickers "Your marker controlled with joystick. To draw stix press fast or slow. Claim areas by joining walls with stix." Or so the first three simple sentences of the original Qix attract mode boldly stated. It continues, "Scores based on area. Fast score 250. Slow score 500." Ten words on how I am to be rated. Already a sense of urgency is mounting within. However there is more – a SURPRISE... "Claim more than 75% of playfield for special bonus." What could it be? I must know. All that lies between me and the goal are the "Opponents: Qix, Sparx, Fuse, Spiral Death Trap." These odd and abstract antagonists move in such an uncanny manner. What methods do I need to apply to "Evade Qix" and "Dodge Sparx?" What do I need to do to become a coveted "Kicker" member?

The fall of 1981 and an eleven year-old boy's mind stumbles with many intriguing questions, including the obvious. How do I pronounce this crazy game, anyway [quix], [squix], [quicks], [kicks]? It is only three letters long and my fourth grade education is already failing me!

The true diction is not "QUIX" but "KICKS." There are two stories that explain the possible origin of how the game was named. As with much lore, the tales should be taken with a grain of salt, and not argued amongst friends at classic gaming expos across the country.

The first tales goes something like this: Taito debuted the Qix machine at the 1981 AMOA show. As with such events, the press was on-hand for the event and after Taito unveiled the game, it was made available for play to attendees and honored guests. This was the early eighties and Atari was on top. Much of the camera eye focused on Atari founder Nolan Bushnell. Rumor has it that Nolan took the time to sample Taito's new game, giving the cabinet "kicks" in frustration as he quickly lost his markers to the machine.

While it is not wholly unusual for a product to be displayed before a product name has been assigned, and while this event is recorded to have happened, it is probably more plausible that the second account is more accurate. This alternate story reports that co-designer and programmer, Randy Pfeiffer (half of the rhyming husband and wife team of Randy and Sandy Pfeiffer) had an automobile sporting a vanity license plate stating "JUS4QIX." According to his wife Sandy, Randy enjoyed the phonetically sounding variant so much that he named his game after it: Qix!

While maze games and intergalactic battles ruled the early arcades, Qix was a breath of fresh air and a shot of originality when it appeared on the scene in 1981. Being the first "drawing game" there was nothing like the title in the arcades, and it was very much ahead of its time.

The game was published by Taito, the same company that brought us the fondly remembered Space Invaders in 1979. Unlike Space Invaders and most Taito games, Qix was created in America and not imported from the Japanese market.

As the attract mode of Qix implies, it is a simple but very challenging strategy game. The player controls a marker that is shaped like a small diamond that moves around the game screen similar to the popular child's toy, the Etch a Sketch. Using two different speed buttons and a 4-directional joystick, the player tries to gain real estate from the unpredictable moving Qix by enclosing parts of the play area a single block at a time. The player must keep his eye on the countdown timer and avoid working himself into an irreversible death spiral. The player is safe from the menacing Qix while not drawing, but it is pursued by and vulnerable to sparks and fuses that can travel on any player-created line paths. This dynamic of always being safe and in danger at the same time is a unique element and a big (ahem) DRAW to the game!

Qix was an immediate hit upon its release. It performed BIG numbers for Taito, especially in more logic-minded location such as on college campuses. Qix was also profitable among older players in bars, where inebriated clientele fumbled their pocket change into this difficult quarter-eating machine at an amazingly fast rate. The casual gamer, those not wearing "beer-goggles" or of an eager mind were often turned off by the plain nature of the game and color scheme.

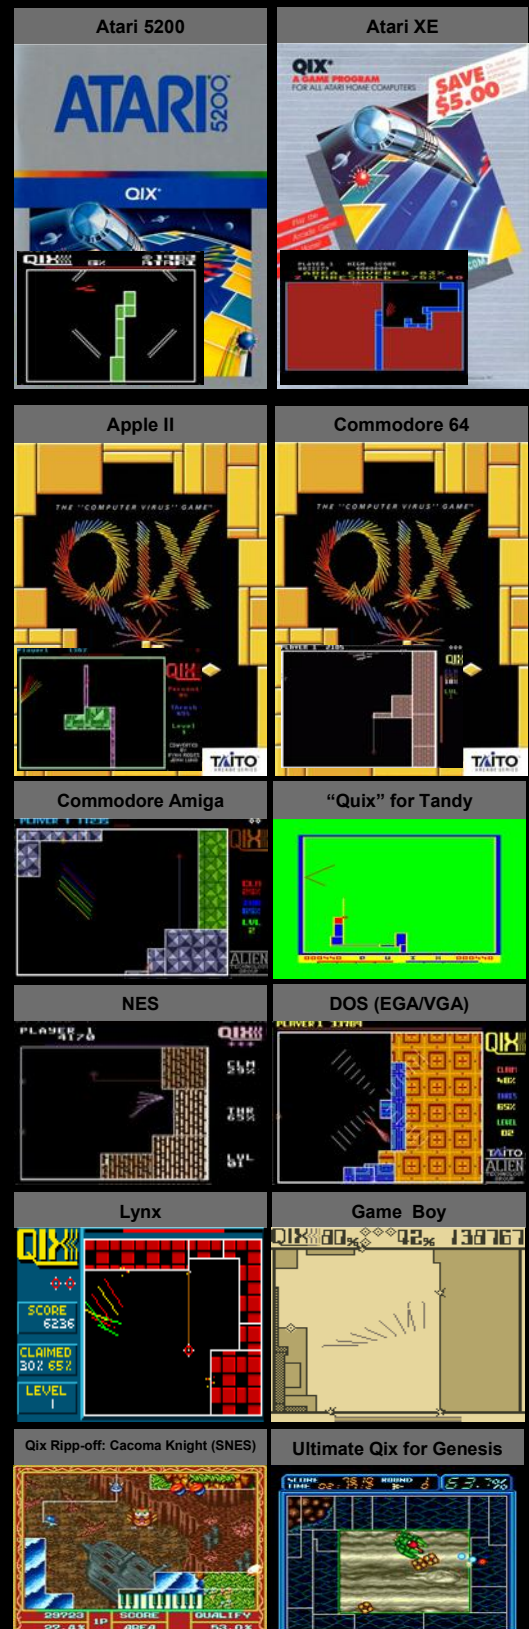

The early eighties arcade scene, like many other arenas, had its share of societal rules. For games that required a large portion of playing time, it was a trend for eager players to place their waiting quarters against the glass screen of the coin-op machine to imply that they had "dibs" on the next game. Many game players at the time would brag by learning patterns or strategies that would allow them to take enormous amounts of time on a machine, piling up anxious quarters and endearing and frustrating fans. Since crowds entice more to gather, it makes a dynamic and fuels the popularity. This was NOT the case with Qix. The machine was deemed as "simply unbeatable" by masters of the trade because of the random and unpredictable movement of the dreaded Qix. With an enormous amount of possible movement combinations and no patterns to fool the Qix opponent, even the best of players lost interest when they could not improve their scores and best the Qix cabinet.

Qix vanished from the arcades rather quickly after a short but modest success. Most machines were converted to better earning Taito titles. The arcade version of Qix is a rare find and is becoming more valuable to coin-op collectors and fans alike. Many enthusiasts have been pursuing the Japanese counterpart of the game, known as "Volfied."

After offering an enhanced variant that offered a different color scheme, "Qix II Tournament," also by the rhyming couple Sandy and Randy Pfeiffer, Taito placed "Qix" in a state of dormancy for years. In 1987, Taito released "Super Qix" to little fanfare. Taito also licensed "Qix" for release on the Nintendo Entertainment System and Game Boy. Unfortunately, these reissues of the Qix titles sold quite poorly. When the rise in popularity of strategy and puzzle games emerged with the release and continued success of Tetris, Taito chose to revive the series as "Twin Qix" in 1995. However, Taito was too late and a slew of other manufacturers had already overcrowded the market with competing games of "Tetris" variations or other thinking games such as "Bust-A-Move", "Columns", "Klax" and a handful of others.

Qix is currently enjoying a loyal cult following. In 2004, a small publisher by the name of Mud Duck, quietly released the latest Qix installment, Qix Neo, for the original Playstation. A year later, a classic game compilation that collected twenty-nine Taito coin-ops was released under the moniker Taito Legends. This collection, available on the Playstation 2, X-Box and PC, includes many fantastic games, including Volfied and Super Qix.
